PREFACE

THIS book professes to contain all the Greek poetry which has been recovered from papyri ; except (1) texts already published in other volumes of the Loeb Classical Library, (2) texts destined for publication in other volumes (e.g. the fragments of Callimachus), (3) fragments which are too small and broken to be either coherently translatable or—in our opinion—worth reprinting here for any other cause.^a A few texts from ostraca and parchment have been included for special reasons. The contents therefore exclude the fragments of Hesiod, Alcman, Alcaeus, Bacchylides, Timotheus, Herodes and others ; Sappho, Pindar and Corinna are sparsely represented ; there remain (1) all the papyrus-fragments of Tragedy,^b (2) all of Comedy, except the greatest part of ^a Texts of importance to the scholar but not yielding a sufficiently connected sense to be worth reprinting here include among others the following : Berliner Klassikertexte, v. 1, p. 67 ; P. Oxy. nos. 419, 676, 1823 ; Cat. Lit. Pap. B.M. nos. 51, 53, 57 ; P. Ryl. no. 1 ; P. Hibeh. nos. 10, 11 ; Archiv für Papyrusforschung, iii. p. 1 ; Raccolta Lombroso, p. 29 ; P. Vindob. 29779. P.S.I. iii. no. 157 is omitted because I can make no sense of it ; and I have ventured to think that no useful purpose would be served by republishing the fragments of Dioscorus of Aphroditopolis.

^b Except the fragment commonly ascribed to Aeschylus, Carians (see H. Weir Smyth, Loeb Aeschylus, vol. ii.).

PREFACE

Menander, (3) all of Mime (despite its want of poetry), (4) a considerable number of fragments in lyric, iambic, elegiac and hexameter verse: altogether, about four thousand two hundred lines of Greek poetry.

The edition of these texts was originally undertaken by Mr. C. H. Roberts, Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford. Engaged in heavier labours he transferred the task to me; but not before he had nearly completed a catalogue of all fragments to be taken from publications up to the summer of 1933^a; this catalogue was seen and so far approved by Hunt himself. Mr. Roberts handed to me at the same time a book of notes, the result of long and ingenious labour on the Tragic and Comic fragments: although I started the work again from the beginning, I derived great profit from his researches, and here express my gratitude.

The reader will find that the text and translation of each piece are preceded by a short bibliography and an introductory note. I must briefly explain both these and the texts themselves.

At the head of each text stands a full reference to the editio princeps, followed by abbreviated references to books, articles, reviews and notes which deal with the whole or some part or aspect of the text. These little bibliographies do not always aim at completeness; which, for such pieces as Hypsipyle and Ichneutae among others, was beyond both my power and the scope of my book. And I have of course excluded

^a The editiones principes referred to in this catalogue are scattered over four dozen different books and periodicals, a few of which are almost—one or two quite—unobtainable in England. I have at last had access to all except the ed. pr. of no. 129 (written in Russian, which I cannot read).

references to works (especially reviews) which seemed to add nothing to the subject. I hope that the bibliography often includes all that contributes to the elucidation of the text; but I am unhappily certain that there must be some, and may be many, regrettable omissions.

The bibliographies are often followed by introductory notes, which try very briefly to illuminate the texts against their literary and historical background, to elucidate their general meaning, to comment on divers matters of interest and importance such as authorship, style and date, and to give wherever possible—often, I fear, where it was not possible—the context of the fragment itself. Such notes are unusual in this series of volumes; but they may be justified by the fragmentary nature of the texts, which are often difficult to understand without some preliminary exposition and explanation: often enough both text and translation depended on matters which are discussed in the introductory note. In a few instances the notes do nothing more than justify readings in the text or points in the translation: that this was necessary, will be admitted freely by those who have studied the latest fragments of Euphorion, or followed the controversy which rages around the Niobe of Aeschylus. These introductions were written or revised after perusal of the works to which the bibliographies refer; I am therefore heavily indebted to those works, however much I modify them or go beyond them.

As for the texts: again, I could not conform to the custom of this series, because I could rarely find a "received" text which I might adopt and reprint; I must therefore construct my own. My practice has been to start with the editio princeps as a basis, and to embellish it with such modifications as were dictated by later research and by my own study.^a I am not a papyrologist ; consequently it signifies little that I have read many of my texts in the original papyri, the great majority of them in photographic reproductions—most published, others bought and borrowed. In my study of some of these texts, especially nos. 1, 30 and 121, I had the incomparable benefit of Mr. Edgar Lobel's assistance ; those familiar with his standards will not need the reminder that his assistance in my study by no means implies his approval of my result.

A word about supplements. I began eager to fill every gap with flawless fragments of my own composition ; I ended with the desire—too late—to remove all that is not either legible in the papyrus or replaceable beyond reasonable doubt. At the eleventh hour, indeed, I expelled handfuls of private poetry : yet far too much remains, hard though I tried to print nothing which is inconsistent with spaces and traces in the papyrus, and to be guided, for the sense of my supplements, by certain or probable indications provided by the legible text.

Of my translations I cannot think with any satisfaction. The insuperable difficulties of rendering Greek poetry into English are in no way mitigated

^a In publishing the result, I have usually printed what I considered to be the best text hitherto produced ; footnotes then refer only to divergences from that standard. Such basic texts are denoted by asterisks in the bibliographies. Where no asterisk appears, it must be understood that for special reasons I have been unable to adopt any single text as basic ; in such cases, the authors of all supplements, etc., are named in the footnotes.

when the Greek is a disjointed fragment, often obscure and controversial, sometimes highly unpoetical. The only purpose which my versions can serve is to make it clear how I have understood the Greek—if I have made it clear, and if I did understand it. Had my predecessors (most of them) had even this ideal, my task would have been much easier. Many of these fragments have not been translated before.

Since October 1939 I have been altogether unable to give either the time or the attention necessary to a proper reading of the proofs.^a But Mr. Roberts—equally distracted by new duties—has exercised unceasing vigilance. And late, but not too late, Professor J. D. Beazley performed a miracle of deep and painless surgery on every page: to him above all my readers owe whatever state of convalescence they may find in this volume; they will never know how ill it was before.

October 1940

^a In particular, I have been unable to take account of works which were published, or became accessible to me, while this book was being printed, e.g. Mette, Supplementum Aeschyleum, Berlin, 1939 (p. 31=no. 20, p. 22=no. 35, p. 47=no. 1, p. 71=no. 2); Edmonds, Mnemos. 1939, 1 and Schmid, Philol. 93, 413 (=no. 40); Szantyr, Philol. 93, 287 (=no. 17); Schmidt, Phil. Woch. 59, 1939, 833; Collart, Rev. Et. Gr. 52, 1939, 222. Murray, in the introduction to his Aeschylus (Oxford, 1940) gives a clue to part of the contents of the forthcoming volume of Oxyrhynchus Papyri.

The whole of the first edition was destroyed by enemy action, and the translator has revised this reprint.

Π throughout in notes = the original papyrus of the text.

Dates at the head of each piece refer to the age of the papyrus (3 B.C., 1 A.D. of course mean "the third century B.C., the first century A.D.," not the third and first years of those centuries).

Dates in the index of contents refer to the time, certain or probable, when the fragments were composed.

Square brackets [] enclose letters which are lost in lacunae in the original papyrus, conjecturally restored by modern scholars. Round brackets () indicate the omission in the original of the letters enclosed, either by accident or through deliberate abbreviation (as in nos. 77, 113).

Dots under letters signify that the letters are not certainly read ; dots inside brackets represent the approximate number of missing letters. A dash (paragraphus) in the text or margin of the Greek denotes change of speaker ; where a speaker's name appears in brackets, in full or abbreviated, it is to be understood that the papyrus has a paragraphus in that place or else provides an indication that one must be restored.

Abbreviations of authors' names and of titles of works are chiefly those adopted by the latest edition of Liddell & Scott's Lexicon ; any others will no doubt explain themselves readily.

I am bound to append the following notes in explanation of my text of this desperately difficult fragment.

V. 1. Niobe must be the speaker: at least, our Papyrus certainly ascribed the lines to her. Reading ἐποιμώζουσα as it does in v. 7, it must have had a finite tense (first person) in the beginning of v. 8, e.g. ἔκλανσα. Otherwise the Papyrus could have made no sense at all; and that there is no reason whatever to assume. Though ἐποιμώζουσα may well be an incorrect reading, there is no reason to assume a further corruption—to suppose that the intrusion of this word, if indeed it is intrusive, destroyed or at all altered the general grammar and construction of the sentence.

[2 A.D.]

The Papyrus, then, certainly ascribed the lines to Niobe : and to my mind, the arguments hitherto brought against the ascription are singularly weak :—

(1) Hesychius quotes v. 7 in the form τέκνοις ἔπωζε τοῖς τεθνηκόσιν : here I agree with Körte that the third person of the verb in this citation is too easily explicable in other ways (see Körte, Hermes, loc. cit. p. 238) to be a good reason for altering our fragment to suit it :—Hesychius is clearly paraphrasing, not quoting ; hence his imperfect tense (which no editor accepts for our fragment) and the incompleteness of his line (which he leaves two—or three—syllables short).^a

(2) The tone of the speech. Niobe has long been silent, sitting on her children's tomb : when at last she speaks, will her utterance be so calm, so gnomic, so philosophical ? We must answer that we do not know the tone of the speech as a whole ; and cannot be certain of that of our own small fragment. There is nothing cogent in the assertion that the tone and spirit of these lines, so far as we apprehend them, are such that the Niobe of Aeschylus could not—or even probably

^a It is quite possible that Hesychius's citation comes from some other part of the same play : repetitions of a striking metaphor within one play are a common feature of Greek tragedy.

LITERARY PAPYRI

would not—have spoken thus. As few scholars make use of this argument, I say no more about it.

(3) Some of those who read ἐπώζει, ἐπώζουσα, in v. 7, with the meaning "sit on eggs," allege that such a metaphor in a description of Niobe by herself is intolerable. This is anyway a matter of opinion. But the argument may be ignored by those who believe (as I do) that in the original text the offensive metaphor had no place at all. See note on v. 7.

(4) If ἀναστενάζε[ται is read in v. 1, the question is of course settled. But the reading in that place is extremely uncertain. So dubious are the traces that the possibilities range over ἀναστενάζε[ται, ἀναστενάζο[μαι, ἀναστεν[ε]ω ο[, ἀναστεν[ε]ω θ[, ἀναστεν[ε]ω ε[, ἀναστενάζο[μεν.

(5) If τῆσδε in v. 11 refers to Niobe, the reference should normally (in Aeschylus) be made about Niobe by another person, not by herself: i.e. the pronoun ὅδε, ἧδε is not used in Aeschylus to denote the speaker, without further qualification. But since we do not know the meaning or reading of that line—since indeed we do not even know whether the word in question refers to Niobe at all (v. Lesky, ad loc.)—this argument must be dismissed. If, for example, we read ψυχῆς] κόμιστρα τῆσδ' ἐκὰς πεφρ[ασμένος, the objection disappears altogether.

(6) Some scholars have objected that Niobe should not lament the loss of her beauty in v. 8: it is an "intolerable lapse into sentimentality" for Niobe to regret the passing of her "poor vanished beauty." But where is the loss of Niobe's beauty mentioned? Not in the Papyrus. Niobe may possibly be weeping because of some consequence of her beauty; but so far as our text goes, she is not lamenting for the loss or destruction of it. Indeed the beauty may even be that of her children, which had proved fatal to them, cf. Parthenius 33 εἰς ἔριν ἀφικομένην Δητοῦ περὶ καλλιτεκνίας, and Pearson's note on Soph. fr. 448—in one version, evidently, the beauty of the children was an essential element in the story. However that may be, it is certain that Niobe's pride in her own beauty was an important factor (Ovid, Metam. vi. 181 and Lesky, loc. cit. p. 2): so Niobe may be weeping not the destruction of her beauty, but the consequences of it.

Vv. 1-4. Niobe cannot say, without some qualification, that she does nothing but mourn her father (or, mourns nobody but her father).—She must have mourned her children first. No doubt the preceding lines made vv. 1-4 easily intelligible—Niobe, having mourned her children, turns for a moment at the end of her speech to consideration of her father, who will be heart-broken when he learns these events.—I agree with Lesky in his supposition that Tantalus does not know what has happened: he is coming in the hope of finding a happy daughter and grandchildren—he will find the one in mourning and the others buried. Well may Niobe, having abundantly lamented her children's fate, exclaim on the eve of Tantalus's arrival "Long have I mourned my children, and now I only mourn Tantalus, who will be distraught through this calamity." The conclusion of the first line cannot be restored with certainty (see above). To ἀναστενάζομαι (or ἀναστενάζεται) there is the considerable objection that the middle form is being specially invented for this passage. In Soph. Eurypylus, ed. pr., fr. 5 col. 1 line 15, ἐστενάζετο is read, and the first editors called it a middle; but there is nothing to show that it is not a passive. We may quote such rarities as στένομαι Eur. Ba. 1372, μεταστένομαι Med. 996, μετακλαίομαι Hec. 214; but it is not certain that these are adequate parallels for a verb in -άζω. And we must already accept sufficient oddities in this mysterious piece without creating more. For instance δόντα in v. 2. It seems to equal ἐκδόντα. Half a dozen apparent parallels can be quoted; but (as Schadewaldt observes) in all of them (e.g. Med. 288) the context assists the meaning of δοῦναι greatly, —whereas here it does not so (though possibly the preceding lines assisted it).

LITERARY PAPYRI

In vv. 2-4 I construe : εἰς οὐρανὸν βίον ὁ Φοῖβος τὸν Τάνταλον ἐξώκειλε.

V. 5. τοῦπι[τ]εῖμιον would be preferable here to τοῦπι[τ]έρμιον if only it were the likelier reading—partly to avoid yet another peculiarity (the use of τὸ ἐπιτέρμιον as a noun), partly because the sense is more powerful and explicit. But τοῦπι[τ]έρμιον is the likelier reading of the Papyrus.

V. 6. τριταῖον is highly praised, and may be correct. To call it “an absolutely certain supplement” is uncritical. We do not after all know exactly how many days Niobe sat there. (Unless we require no more evidence than a variant reading in a Life of Aeschylus.)

Vv. 7-8. The most reasonable solution of the difficulties here seems to be this:—the original reading was ἐπώζουσα, and it meant “crying ὠά,” i.e. mourning. For this, the easier reading ἐποιμώζουσα was later substituted (for such alterations in the text of Aeschylus, v. Quintilian x. 1. 66). The sources of Hesychius, who paraphrases ἔπωζε, read ἐπ-ὠζουσα and mistakenly interpreted it as ἐπικαθημένη τοῖς ὤοις.

Vv. 10-13. The great objection to giving these lines to e.g. the Chorus is that this device does not remove the difficulty which prompted it—the apparent awkwardness of connexion, especially of the μὲν and δέ. And the difficulty itself may not seem very great, especially if the supplement μάτην is removed from v. 10. Read e.g. αὐθις in its place, and the piece runs smoothly enough. V. 9 is the gnome which rounds off the description of Niobe’s present sufferings and attitude (vv. 1-8). Then comes a move forward to another theme : “Tantalus will soon be here ; meantime I will tell you the origin of these sufferings which you have just observed.”

AESCHYLUS

V. 11. The end of this line is mysterious. πεφα[, not πεφρ[,^a is the reading at the end according to ed. pr. And even if this were not so, such a line as (e.g. ζητών)] κόμιστρα τῆσδε καὶ πεφρ[ασμένος is not very good. καὶ πεφα[σμένων (from *φένω) is no better; τῶν πεφασμένων is required, and we have already tolerated or introduced sufficient oddnesses. Rather than endure either of these, I would read (e.g. ἐπ' ἀγ)]κόμιστρα τῆσδ' ἐκὰς πεφα[σμένος (from φαίνομαι).^b It is by no means certain that τῆσδε could not be used by Niobe with reference to herself; though it would be one more oddness introduced into the text.

V. 12. μῆνιν τίνα, not μῆνίν τινα, should be read, to avoid producing a line without a caesura.

V. 19. For the beginning of this, we read that ἀλλ' οἱ μὲν is "certainly too long," but (in the same breath) ἀλλ' οἱ γὰρ "fits the space." I imagine that this is a mere oversight; it is of course impossible to estimate differences so nicely in this Papyrus.

V. 20. At the end, [εὐπραξίαν is warmly praised by some, not despite the adjacent εὖ πράσσοντες but because of it. I agree with those who find the repetition offensive; e.g. [ὄλβου χάριν would be better; but the mot juste remains to be found.

V. 21. Lobel advises me that κάλλισ[τεύμασι is at least as probable as the singular, if the reference is to the beauty of the children. And it is equally possible that some case of κάλλισ[τος should be read.

^a Aesch. fr. 438 N. πεφρασμένος παρεσκευασμένος εἰς τὸ φρασθῆναι, προσεκτικὴν ἔχων διάνοιαν Αἰσχύλος: this is said to make πεφρ[ασμένος "certain" here, despite the evidence of Π; I know of no evidence for the connexion of the two passages. ^b Or, if πεφρ[is—despite ed. pr.—possible: ψυχῆς] κόμιστρα τῆσδ' ἐκὰς πεφρ[ασμένος.

NIOBE. Now I only mourn my father, strong Tantalus, who begot me and gave me forth in marriage; to such a life without a haven has he been driven aground by Phoebus; the high winds of calamity assault our house. Your own eyes behold my wedding's end: three days already sitting here upon the tomb, moaning above my children dead, I mourn the misfortune of their beauty. Man brought to misery is a shadow, nothing else.

Strong Tantalus will presently come hither, . . . So now, the anger of Phoebus against Amphion, wherefore he has destroyed his house with outrage, root and branch, I will expound to you—you are not enemies. God first creates a fault in man, when He is minded utterly to ruin his estate. Man must attend meantime to the good fortune that God gives him, and guard his lips from insolence. They whose turn it is to prosper never think that they shall stumble and spill forth the (welfare) of to-day. For see, I too, exultant in the beauty . . .

No. 5 (1957).

The following is the outline of the legend on which this play was based:—Telephus (born by Auge to Heracles in Arcadia) succeeded Teuthras as king of Mysia, where the Greeks landed by accident (having lost their way) while sailing against Troy. During a conflict between Greeks and Mysians, Achilles wounded Telephus. The Greeks departing from Mysia were scattered by a tempest: and reassembled in Argos, where they prepared a second expedition against Troy. Now Telephus, who had been advised by Apollo that his painful wound could be healed by none but its author, came to the Greek army at Argos in search of Achilles. There were obstacles to be overcome; but in the end Achilles healed Telephus, who in return guided the Greek fleet to Troy.

Of the course of Sophocles' play we know—

(1) From fr. 144 N.:—a roll of the assembled Achaeans

SOPHOCLES

GATHERING OF THE ACHAEANS

was called early in the play ; and it probably transpired that Achilles was absent.

(2) From our fragment and from the story as a whole :—Telephus arrives, eager to be treated by Achilles. It is likely that he offers his services as guide in return for reconciliation with Achilles. This offer the Greeks decline, perhaps because they think that Telephus is a foreigner (possibly an oracle had said "no foreigner shall be your guide"). It then appears that Telephus is after all a Greek by parentage ; and his offer is accepted. It remains therefore only to persuade Achilles to heal Telephus and to accept him as guide : this is to be done through the mediation of Odysseus, portrayed as a diplomatic go-between. It is clearly expected that Achilles will prove difficult. The sequel can only be inferred from the legend : Achilles was persuaded to heal Telephus with rust from the spear which wounded him, and to consent to his appointment as guide.

In our fragment, Telephus (addressed in the vocative case, v. 3) has just left the scene, having been accepted as guide for the fleet, which prepares to sail presently. Achilles enters, and is waylaid by Odysseus.

So much is clear enough : but I do not understand the part which Achilles played. Why is he expected to prove an obstacle ? And especially, how is it that he expects to sail at once ? Either he does not know (or does not consider) that a guide is necessary ; or he has already appointed some other guide. The first alternative is possible but unlikely : he was a member of the previous expedition, and therefore knows the disadvantage of sailing without a guide. In the second alternative, it is impossible (only for want of evidence) to identify the guide upon whom his choice had fallen (it could hardly be himself : if he was a sufficient pilot, how could he explain his failure on the occasion of the first expedition ?).

SOPHOCLES

Sophocles' Gathering of the Achaeans (produced sometime before Euripides' Telephus in 438 B.C.) was the third of Sophocles' trilogy on the subject of Telephus (see esp. the inscription from Aexone—or Halae Aexonides—including the sentence Σοφοκλῆς ἐδίδασκε Τηλέφειαν; Fromhold-Treu, loc. cit. p. 324). The first two plays were Aleadae (see Fromhold-Treu, ibid. p. 326) and Mysians (ibid. p. 329). It is possible that the anonymous fragment on p. 140 comes from our play.

CHORUS. . . . a swift wind from south or west shall speed us to the shores of Troy; you, seated at the rudder, shall show the sailor at the prow, for him to see, a passage for the sons of Atreus straight to Ilium. The land of Tegea—Hellas, not Mysia—brought you to the light to be our sailor, surely by the favour of a god, and escort of our oars over the sea.

ACHILL. Odysseus! You too, but lately come from your island home? Where are our comrades gathered? Why are you all delaying? This is no time to rest our feet at ease.

ODYSS. It is resolved, the army sails; the commanders attend to it. Son of Peleus: you are come in the hour of need.

ACHILL. Yet I see no bands of oarsmen on the beach, nor of soldiers present to answer the call.

ODYSS. It shall be presently. Man's haste should be as the time requires.

ACHILL. Ever idle and delaying! Each one of you sits and makes a thousand speeches, and the work progresses nowhere! Myself, as you see, am here and ready for action, I and my army of Myrmidons; I shall sail without waiting for the Atridae's tardiness.

Soph.* p. 21; Brizi, Aegyptus, 8, 1927, 3 (and literature, ibid. p. 3, n.); Reinhardt, Sophokles, p. 235.

The authorship of Sophocles is suggested^a by the coincidence of fr. 5. i. 9 (ed. pr.) with a fragment attributed to Sophocles (on a theme evidently the same as that of our fragments) by Plutarch, De cohib. ira 10, p. 458 D. The attribution is supported by the style of the fragments, and by the relation of Π to the Ichneutae papyrus (see ed. pr., pp. 86-87). It is clear from the lines themselves that the play was concerned with the death of Eurypylus (cf. vv. 26-28, Priam mourns the son of Telephus, i.e. Eurypylus) who was slain in a duel with Neoptolemus (Homer, Od. xi. 519). That Sophocles wrote a play entitled Eurypylus is not certain, but had already been inferred by Tyrwhitt from Plutarch, loc. cit., cf. Weil, Rev. Et. Gr. iii. 343: a play with that title is mentioned by Aristotle, Poet. 23, 1459 b 6.

The story on which this play was based was probably as follows:—Priam sent to his sister Astyoche (wife of Telephus and mother of Eurypylus) a golden vine, given to Laomedon (or Tros) in compensation for the rape of Ganymede; hoping thus to persuade her to send her son forth to fight against the Greeks at Troy. She sent him; and he performed many heroic deeds before he was slain in a duel by Neoptolemus.

In our fragments, Astyoche laments the death of her son in dialogue with the Chorus. There follows immediately the concluding portion of a Messenger's speech, relating the sequel of the death of Eurypylus. Evidently this Ἀγγελία was strangely divided into two parts, separated by a short dialogue between Astyoche and the Chorus. The presence of the Mysian queen at Troy is less surprising since we know that she and her sisters were among the women taken captive after the fall of Troy (Tzetz. Lycophr. 921, 1075). The further course of the play is unknown, but probably included lamentation and preparation for the burial of Eurypylus. In the first part of his divided speech, the Messenger narrated the duel of Eurypylus and Neoptolemus. Beyond this all is uncertain. (See Brizi, loc. cit.: the scene of the action is Troy, probably in front of Priam's palace; Priam himself was probably one of the actors; Neoptolemus was certainly not.)

6 [2 B.C.] INAXΟΣ ΣΑΤΥΡΙΚΟΣ

Ed. pr. Hunt-Smyly, Tebtunis Papyri, iii. 1, 1933, p. 3, no. 692, Plate I. See Körte, Archiv, xi. 1935, 252; Schmidt, Phil. Woch. 1934, 1302; Fritsch, Neue Fragm. d. Aisch. u. Soph., diss. Hamb. 1936, 33; *Pfeiffer, Sitzb. Bayer. Akad. 1938, 2, 23 (to this I am especially indebted, though I have not followed Pfeiffer's text in all details). See further Pearson, Fragm. of Soph. i. p. 197. Fragments of Il too small for inclusion here reveal the new words πορπαφόρος ("wearing a brooch"), οἴζομαι ("lament").

The ascription of this text to Sophocles is not absolutely certain (see Körte, p. 253): but Pfeiffer has shown it to be probable, in the course of his commentary (e.g. pp. 46-47, 57-59).

The scene of the action of Sophocles' Inachus was probably the Argolis. Fr. (a) below is preceded by fragments which reveal σύριγγο[s] δὲ κλύω, σ]ταθμοῦ, τῆν [. .]σιν βοῶ[ν: hence it is likely that the speakers are near or among the cattle-herds of Inachus.

From this text I (following Pfeiffer, to a certain extent) make the following inferences about the course of the action of this Satyric play:—

(a) Zeus sent Hermes to procure for him Io, who has been transformed into a cow and is guarded by Argus. Hermes demands her surrender from Inachus (father of Io), whose refusal leads to a quarrel. Inachus is obdurate: Hermes departs with his mission unaccomplished, but threatening to return: the Chorus is summoned to form an additional protection for Io. [The quarrel between Hermes and Inachus certainly occurred early in the play, Pfeiffer, p. 56.]

glens of Euboea. If the voyage still . . . the same one brought him hither and took him home . . .

[2 B.C.]

(b) Hermes returns, wearing the Cap of Hades, which renders him invisible: thus he may elude the Chorus and the myriad eyes of Argus, whom he will lull to slumber with the music of a shepherd's pipe: he enters playing the pipe. The Chorus is alarmed, but confident that Hermes will fail again.—They tell him, he will try in vain a second time: the first failure was of course his earlier dismissal by Inachus (cf. v. 22 aδ).

The further course of the action is quite uncertain: except that Hermes succeeded in disposing of Argus. The play may have ended with the departure of Io on her travels; or with a reconciliation between Zeus and Hera, and the liberation of Io (Iris certainly appeared and conversed with Hermes: perhaps she was a messenger of peace, Pfeiffer, p. 56).

Frs. (b) and (c) come from consecutive columns. The position of fr. (a) is quite uncertain; I have placed it before the others, because the sequence of events seems to demand it. We have two scenes.—(1) A quarrel between Hermes and Inachus: Hermes, who is not yet invisible, clearly comes with a command from Zeus, and clearly comes in vain. (2) Hermes enters invisible, and the Chorus says "you will fail again": both this observation of the Chorus, and the change from visibility to invisibility—from direct to deceitful methods—suggest to me that the former scene must precede, and explain, the latter.

I agree with Pfeiffer (p. 55) in rejecting the common inference from fr. 279 (Pearson) that the transformation of Io into a cow actually occurred in the course of this play.

The Dramatis Personae are Apollo, Silenus, a Chorus of Satyrs, Cyllene, and Hermes. The scene of the action is Mount Cyllene in Arcadia. Apollo has lost his cattle; he has sought them vainly in Northern Greece, and has now come to the Peloponnese. He promises a reward to their discoverer. Silenus enters and offers the aid of himself and his sons the Satyrs, in return for a prize of gold and release from slavery. After a short ode, the Chorus and its leader advance on the track of the cattle. Confused prints are discovered, leading to the entrance of a cave. The Chorus is suddenly alarmed by a strange sound, which appears to issue from the cave. Silenus reproaches the Satyrs for their cowardice, and contrasts therewith the courage which he himself frequently displayed when he was young. The chase is resumed ; but the strange sound is heard again, and panic ensues. At last they beat loudly on the roof of the underground cave ; Cyllene emerges and inquires the meaning of their uproar. She informs them that she is nursing a son of Zeus and of the daughter of Atlas. This child—Hermes—, grown marvellously in a few days, has fashioned an instrument of music from the shell of a tortoise.—From this comes the noise which alarmed the Satyrs. Now it appears that Hermes has used a cowhide to stretch over the tortoise-shell ; and the Satyrs at once presume that the possession of this cowhide proves that Hermes is the thief of Apollo's cattle. The fragment ends with a quarrel between Cyllene and the Chorus ; she denying, and they insisting, that he must be the thief.

The conclusion of the play is not preserved. In col. xvii. 18-19 ed. pr., Apollo seems to admit that Silenus and his Satyrs have earned the promised reward. Thereafter probably Hermes, confronted with Apollo, appeased his anger by giving him the lyre. The analogy of Euripides' Cyclops makes it likely that "the dénouement may not have occupied more than another two or three hundred lines" (ed. pr.).

It was not previously known that Sophocles had treated this story. He diverges from the detail of the Homeric Hymn to Hermes (with which he was familiar, Pearson, p. 228) in several points.—In Sophocles (1) the theft of the cattle precedes the invention of the lyre, (2) the scene is Mount Cyllene, not Triphylian Pylos, (3) the Satyrs are the hunters of the stolen cattle, (4) Cyllene, not Maia, is the nurse of Hermes. Ichneutae, which is probably an early work of Sophocles (Pearson, p. 230), immediately invites comparison with the only other extant satyric drama, Euripides' Cyclops. The comparison is largely a contrast. Sophocles' play reveals—so far as we can tell—much less both of humour and of indecency: further, its diction is predominantly tragic, admitting only a very few vulgar phrases, and numerous exclamations which are below the tragic level: in its iambic metre, Ichneutae is again more regular than Cyclops, admitting anapaests in the first foot only, and violating the canon of the final cretic once only (v. 269, a gentle offence). The lyrics, as in Cyclops, are short and slight in size, structure, and metres. Unique is the dialogue in iamb. tetram. acatal. (vv. 238 sqq.).

A difficult problem arises out of v. 45. Apollo promises freedom to Silenus and his Satyrs. Whose slaves then were they? Now Cyllene (vv. 171 sqq.) refers to their master as following in the train of Dionysus with fawnskin and thyrsus. From this it follows that Dionysus himself—otherwise the likeliest candidate—was not their master. Further, how can Apollo liberate the slaves of Dionysus? Pearson (whose account I followed until the last moment) suggests that Apollo himself is the master. But Professor Beazley has convinced me (too late, I fear, to make a necessary alteration in the text) that this Dionysiac Apollo is an impossible creation, and that Pearson's references to Aesch. fr. 341, Eur. fr. 477 do not assist his argument. Beazley (following Robert) suggests that a line has dropped out after 171 (e.g. καὶ τῷ φιλοίνῳ—or κρατίστῳ—πατρί, Σιληνὸν λέγω): then the δεσπότης of 171 is Dionysus, ὃς in 172 is Silenus, and all is natural and requires no further comment (ἐγγόνους νόμφαισι 175 is now free from difficulty—unintelligible, if Apollo is the subject of these lines).

APOLLO. To every man and every god proclaims Apollo: if anyone has seen my cattle, near or far, to him I promise a reward. Grievous and heavy pain is in my heart; someone has robbed me of my cows and all my calves and herds of heifers. Not one is left. All are gone unseen, far from the stables: vainly I follow the traces of their stealthy plot. I never should have thought that any god or mortal man SILENUS. And now what trick have you invented? what's the game? What is it, I say? this new one— hunting on your bellies like that! What sort of method do you call this? It's a mystery to me. Lying on the ground like hedgehogs in a bush, or (stooping) like an (amorous) ape! What is this foolery, and where on earth did you learn it? Tell me: I never heard of such behaviour.

CHORUS. Ow!

SILENUS (addressing members of the Chorus severally). What are you howling for? Who's frightening you? Whom are you looking at? Have you seen a bogey? Why do you keep dancing like dervishes? . . . you want to find out . . . that scraping sound . . .? (A pause.) Why silent now? You used to talk enough!

CHORUS. No, no, be quiet!

SILENUS. What is it there, that you keep turning from?

CHORUS. Listen, do!

SILENUS. How can I listen when I hear no voice?

CHORUS. Do what I say.

SILENUS. A lot of help you will give me in my chase!

CHORUS. Listen to the thing again a moment; a noise that terrifies us here and maddens us; no mortal ever heard it yet!

SILENUS. Why should a mere noise alarm and scare you? Tell me, you damned waxwork dummies, you worthless animals! You see an ogre in every shadow, a bogey everywhere! Useless assistants—spineless, slovenly, unenterprising! Just flesh and chatter and wantonness! in every crisis you profess loyalty, but fly from action. Yet your father, you worthless brutes, was a youth whose valour set up many a splendid trophy in the nymphs' abodes; he never yielded to flight, never lost courage, never ducked at noises made by cattle grazing on the hill; he performed feats in battle whose lustre now you tarnish at some shepherd's new wheedling call. Scared as babies before you even see! You throw away the golden riches that Phoebus promised and guaranteed, and the freedom he agreed to give us, you as well as me. You give it all up and go fast asleep! Come back and search out where the cattle and the cowman went, or you'll be sorry—you shall pay for making such a noise out of mere cowardice!

CHORUS. Father, come here and guide me yourself: you'll soon find out if there is any cowardice. Come here, and you'll learn what nonsense you are talking.

SILENUS. I'll come, and win you to my way of thinking, with a cheer for all like the call of the hunter to the hounds. Come on, no more standing at the cross-road! I will stay on the scene of action and put you on your path.

What is this change from that task wherewith of old you pleased your master?^a . . . who, clad in hide of fawn, bearing the light thyrsus, was ever wont to sing for you that holy song in the god's train, accompanied by nymphs, his descendants, and a youthful company. But this—I know it not, whither your latest madcap whirlwind spins you. 'Tis strange indeed. I heard a cry like the call of hunters when they come near the brood of a beast in its lair, and in the same moment again . . . thief . . . your words referred to a theft . . . and to a proclamation . . . then, dropping that, your shouting, together with stamping of feet, in one roar of confusion came to live on the roof above me.

CHORUS. Stay your anger, stately nymph: I do not come to bring you strife of wars and enemies: nor do I think that any unfriendly foolish word from us shall reach your heart. Ah no, assail me not with taunting, but readily disclose the secret—who is it here below the ground, who spoke with a voice divine to amaze us?

CYLLENE. Come, that's a gentler manner than the other: if you hunt like this, you will learn far more than by violence and attempts upon a frightened nymph. I do not like loud quarrels started in argument. Now be calm, and tell me clearly just what you want.

CHORUS. Queen of this region, mighty Cyllene, I will tell you later why I came. Explain to us this voice that is sounding, and tell us who in the world is setting our teeth on edge.

CYLLENE. You must understand clearly that if you do not keep my story to yourselves, there's a punishment in store, and you will be the sufferers. The facts are a secret, guarded in Heaven, to prevent the news coming to Hera. Zeus came by night to this hidden dwelling of Atlas's daughter, and ravished her . . . unknown to the stately goddess; in the cave he begot an only son, whom in my own arms I nurse, since his mother's strength is wasted in storms of sickness. So night and day I stay beside the cradle and look to his infant needs, food and drink and rest. Every day he grows bigger and bigger, it seems unnatural; I am surprised and frightened by it. Born less than six days ago, he is already thrusting forward . . . to the full bloom of boyhood, sprouting and shooting up with no more delay. Such is the baby whom in our strong-room we hide. We are still concealing him, to humour his father. As for the voice you ask about, which surprised you so much, ringing out as it did from some invisible instrument,—he invented it himself, in a single day, out of an upturned . . . ! That is the kind of thing it is—a vessel invented future, if it gives you any pleasure or hope of profit, laugh at me to your heart's content, enjoy yourselves at your ease so far as I'm concerned. Only don't slander a child who can prove that his father is Zeus. Stop inventing new crimes against new-born babies. He was not born a thief on the father's side and there are no light-fingered gentry in his mother's family. You try and find your thief elsewhere . . . a poor harvest ; there is no hunger in his home. Remember his parentage ; fix the crime where it belongs, not upon him—it's not proper. You always did behave like a baby. You're a full-grown man with a beard, but you are as saucy as a goat among the thistles. It's time that bald skull stopped fluttering with ecstasy. The gods do make folk sorry for silly jokes and chatter : such is my opinion.

CYLLENE. Short, pot-shaped, shrivelled, with a spotted skin.

CHORUS. Like a cat or a panther, perhaps ?

CHORUS. Wriggle, twist, the tales you tell ! Invent what smart remark you will ! One thing you will not persuade me : that he who made this thing by sticking hides together, stole them from any other cattle than Apollo's. Don't try to shift me from this path. . . .

ALCMEON THROUGH CORINTH

παρ' Εὐριπίδῃ ἐν Ἀλκμέωνι τῷ διὰ Κ[ο]ρίνθου λεγόμενον ὑπὸ θεοῦ. The story is given in Apollod. iii. 7. 7. The παρθένος is Manto, daughter of Teiresias ; the two children (παῖδας δύο Apollod., i.e. not—as here—twins) are Amphilocheus and Tisiphone ; the speaker is Apollo. From the prologue.

AND I was without child by her : but she bore to Alcmeon twin children, yet unwed.

ALEXANDER

The following is a brief summary of Snell's painstaking reconstruction (loc. cit.). Even this bare outline is in many points hypothetical.

(1) Prologue spoken by Cassandra.—She tells of the dream of Hecuba, who imagined that she gave birth to a torch from which there issued serpents. Apollo's oracle declares that Hecuba's baby must die. Priam sent the baby forth to be slain ; but it was only exposed, and later found and reared by shepherds. Now games were instituted in honour of the baby whom Priam and Hecuba mourned. The baby was Alexander (Paris).

LITERARY PAPYRI

(2) Parodus, followed by a short dialogue between Hecuba and Cassandra. Cassandra withdraws; Hecuba and the Chorus mournfully recall the child whom they suppose to have died many years ago. Cassandra returns and foretells the doom of Troy. Hecuba and Cassandra quarrel. (Vv. 1-2 belong to this part.)

(3) Stasimon.

(4) Episode.—Priam is informed by a shepherd that a youth named Alexander is intending to compete in the games which are about to take place. A bull has been sought to be the prize, and the choice has fallen upon one which was a favourite of this young countryman Alexander; who therefore, though a slave, is determined to compete and to win the prize.

(5) Stasimon (during which the games take place).

(6) Episode.—A messenger reports the story of the games, and the surprising victory of Alexander therein. This report was probably made to Hecuba. There followed the entrance of Deiphobus and Hector, her sons, both vanquished by Alexander. Deiphobus is enraged at his defeat; Hector takes it easily and endeavours to pacify his brother. (Vv. 3-12, 13-25 belong to this part.)

(7) Stasimon.

(8) Episode.—A debate between Deiphobus and Alexander, whom the former accuses of unfair competition: being a slave, he was not entitled to compete, let alone to win prizes.

EURIPIDES

Priam referees their argument, and decides in favour of Alexander.

(9) Stasimon.

(10) Episode.—Hecuba and Deiphobus determine to murder Alexander. (Vv. 26-38 belong to this part.)

(11) Stasimon.

(12) Exodus.—Hecuba and Deiphobus attempt to kill Alexander: but at the last minute it is revealed that he is son and brother of his would-be murderers. How this recognition was effected is unknown. Perhaps (as Snell suggests) Alexander cried out at the point of death.

οἴμοι θανούμαι διὰ τὸ χρήσιμον φρενῶν, ὁ τοῖσις ἄλλοις γίγνεται σωτηρία.^a

Thereupon Hecuba inquires his meaning, and he reveals that he is not after all a slave; he knows that he is the son of noble parents, but has promised his shepherd-guardian to keep his knowledge secret: otherwise the latter may incur penalties for saving a child whom he had been commanded to slay. He possesses tokens to prove his story. These are brought forward, and Hecuba recognizes them as belonging to the baby whom many years before she had been forced to expose—her Alexander.

In the end, it is likely enough that a divinity (Aphrodite) appeared and forecast the future, thus making a transition to Palamedes, the second play of the trilogy (if indeed it was a trilogy).

(a) CHORUS. Lo! I behold your child Cassandra coming hither before the shrine of Phoebus.

(b) CHORUS. All things I yield to fortune . . .

MESSENGER. He was the champion; he carried off the prize.

Zethus and Amphion, who are now grown to manhood. He knows that Antiope is their mother, but does not know that Zeus is their father. The sons know nothing of either parent. Antiope is to-day a slave and prisoner in the palace of King Lycus and Queen Dirce.

(2) Parodus : a chorus of old men, Attic shepherds, comes to hear Amphion play the lyre. Conversation between these two about the invention of the lyre and about music.

(3) Episode : the celebrated controversy between Zethus and Amphion ; the latter defending the contemplative life of the artist and philosopher, the former representing the soldier and statesman. The centre of the discussion is, " which life is of greater service to the state ? " Euripides is indirectly explaining and defending his own manner and ideal of life.

(4) Episode : (probably) conversation between Antiope—who has been miraculously released from prison—and her sons. Neither party is aware of the relationship. Antiope tells all her story and laments her servitude and present danger.

(5) Hereafter must have been described the recognition of her sons by Antiope and of their mother by Zethus and Amphion. It is not known how the recognition was effected. Later enters Dirce with a chorus of Bacchanals : she takes Antiope and the twins away for punishment.

(6) A messenger narrates the rescue of Antiope and death of Dirce at the hands of Zethus and Amphion.

(7) Exodus : represented by our fragments. Zethus and Amphion, having just killed Dirce, plot to destroy King Lycus also. Lycus enters, eager to capture Antiope and her confederates. Led by the shepherd, he enters their retreat. His death is prevented at the eleventh hour by Hermes, who appears ex machina and commands Lycus to yield the dominion of Thebes to the sons of Antiope.

AMPHION. . . . these men, nor how we shall escape. If Zeus was indeed our own father, he will rescue us and at our side chastise the man we hate. We have come anyway to such a pass that we could not, even if we would, escape the penalty for the blood of Dirce newly shed. If we wait here, our fortunes come to this : either the light of this very day shall see us die, or our own hands shall set a trophy up above our enemies. So much I say, my mother, to you. And this I say to you, who dwell on the bright plain of heaven : do not go marrying for your pleasure and then prove useless to the children you create. Not that, but fighting beside your friends, is the way of honour. Hear us, and grant us to come with good fortune upon our prey, that we may catch this impious man.

And when you do your wife's obsequies and set her on the pyre,—when you have gathered in one place the limbs of your unhappy queen—burn her bones and throw them into the spring of Ares; so shall its outflow, that goes through the city and ever waters the plain of Thebe, receive from her the name of Dirce. And you, when the city of Cadmus is purified, go, sons, and establish a city with seven gates beside the Ismenus. Time the revealer has shown that we are false, your mother fortunate. Go now, and rule this land in my stead, take the sceptre of Cadmus. Zeus grants you the dignity and I grant it with him. Obedient to Hermes, I will cast the ashes of my wife into Ares' fountain, when I have done her obsequies, that from her grave she may flood this Theban plain with flowing waters and be called "Dirce" by men that come after us. Ignored by anthologists, lexicographers, and probably mythographers too, this play had survived hitherto only in a single quotation and a handful of references. From Ar.

LITERARY PAPYRI

Ran. 849 Schol. we learn that its plot was concerned with the passion of Pasiphae for a bull, and the birth of the Minotaur (cf. Joh. Malal. p. 86, 10 ; p. 31, 6 ; Libanius, Decl. vol. iii. p. 375, p. 64, τὸν Μίνω δεινὰ πασχόντα ἐπὶ τῆς σκηνῆς καὶ τὴν οἰκίαν αὐτοῦ διὰ τοῦ τῆς Πασιφάης ἔρωτος ἐν αἰσχύνῃ γεγενημένην). From Ar. Ran. 1356 Schol. we hear that the play included a monody by Icarus, the son of Daedalus : this fact, combined with the evidence of Etruscan urns and a sarcophagus (references ed. pr. p. 78 n. 1), suggests that the plot covered the punishment of Daedalus, who made the wooden cow-frame in which Pasiphae enclosed herself. The solitary quotation (from Porphyrius, Nauck, T.G.F. fr. 472) consists of introductory anapaests recited by a chorus of Initiates devoted to the service of Idaean Zeus.

The outline of the story as it was known to later mythographers (Apollod. iii. 8—not necessarily following Euripides' play) was this :

Minos defended his claim to the dominion of Crete by the argument that the gods had given it to him. To prove this, he asserted that the gods would fulfil whatever he might demand of them. For an instance, he prayed Poseidon to send up a bull out of the sea, promising that he would then sacrifice it. Poseidon heard his prayer : but Minos sent the bull to join his herd, and sacrificed another in its place (or else made no blood-offering at all, see ed. pr. p. 78). Poseidon therefore inflamed Pasiphae, wife of Minos, with passion for the bull : with which she was united, after enclosing herself in a wooden frame shaped like a cow. She gave birth to the Minotaur. Minos discovered the monster and imprisoned it in the labyrinth.

In our fragment, Minos has just discovered the new-born Minotaur, and confronts Pasiphae with her abominable sin. Pasiphae defends herself, with the assistance of the Chorus, who allege that the fault lay chiefly with a confidante (v. 1, cf. v. 47). But Minos condemns his wife and her accomplice to the dungeon. Nothing is certainly known of the sequel : but Croiset's inferences from our fragment are both interesting and probable.

There is nothing to suggest that (as ed. pr. thought) Euripides employed a chorus of Mystics in this play in order to attack the doctrines which they represent. On the contrary our fragment makes it clear that the characters of Minos and the Chorus were contrasted in a manner uncomplimentary to the former. The men of peace and self-control are clearly opposed to the violent and brutal king. Minos, who has but lately ascended his throne, is portrayed as a savage and barbaric despot, according to the Tragic convention (Plato, Minos 312 D 'Ραδάμανθύν γέ φασιν δίκαιον ἄνδρα, τὸν δὲ Μίνων ἄγριόν τινα καὶ χαλεπὸν καὶ ἄδικον.—'Αττικόν, ὧ βέλτιστε, λέγεις μῦθον καὶ τραγικόν). Vv. 35-39 are not ironical : they refer to barbaric conduct about which the earlier part of the play will have given more information. With this character, then, the Chorus stands in sharpest contrast. Minos cannot ignore the Mystics, for they are the high priests of his father's temple. They counsel moderation, mercy and self-control. At the end of the play, perhaps, a divinity appeared ex machina, rescued Pasiphae (Hyginus 40 : Pasiphae remains at liberty), and bade Minos conform to the discipline of the Chorus—foretold that he must soon become a man of peace and piety, a wise legislator and a great ruler of his nation.

If it be thought improbable that the Chorus played so important and integral a part in the play, we can point to the title Κρήτες in support of Croiset's theory. The play was named after the Chorus, not after Minos or Pasiphae : this fact alone proves that the part of the chorus was of great, if not supreme, importance in the action of the drama. On the relation of the Chorus's religion to Orphism, see Mr. Guthrie's admirable Orpheus and Greek Religion, pp. 111, 199.

PASIPHAE. Denial will no longer convince you, for the fact is already manifest. If I had given my body to a man, selling my love for secret hire, how justly were I then exposed for a wanton! As it is, God visited me with madness; so though I suffer, my sin was not freely willed. There is no reason in it. What could I see in a bull, to wound my heart with such distress, so shameful? Was it the sight of his pretty clothes? The gleam of wine-red light that shone from his eyes and auburn hair? The beard that was dark upon his chin? I swear my bridegroom was less handsome! Is this the passion that tempted me into an animal's hide?—Is this the cause of your distemper? I could not even expect to make such a husband father of my children: why, why was I likely to go mad of that malady? The evil spirit of this king has loaded me too with misfortune: and he shall be the one to bear the burden of man's blame: because he did not slay that bull, that apparition, which when it came he swore to sacrifice to the Sea-god. Therefore Poseidon has pursued you and taken vengeance; and on my head this woe is fallen. And then you cry aloud and call the gods to witness—you that wrought these deeds and my disgrace! It is possible that P. Petrie no. xlix (d) p. [161] ibid. is a fragment of our play (iambic trimeters ending ἐμφανῆ παιδὸς μόρον, καί φησιν κραεῖν, ποιῶς ὅπως: all of which would occur very suitably in a speech by e.g. Eurydice, relating to the death of Opheltes. καί φησιν κραεῖν "she admits she killed him" would harmonize very well with Murray's theory that Hypsipyle confessed her deed to Eurydice, cf. ἐμφανῆ παιδὸς μόρον). See Milne, Class. Rev. 40, p. 64.

The following reconstruction of the course of events is based on that of ed. pr., with such modification as later research has made necessary. The story of the play was hitherto known from (a) the scanty fragments of the play (Nauck, 752-770) ; (b) Clem. Alex. Schol. p. 105 ; (c) Apollod. iii. 6. 4 ; (d) P. Nem. Schol. ; (e) Hyginus, fab. 74 ; (f) Statius, Theb. v. 500 sqq. ; (g) Anth. Pal. iii. 10: see Welcker, Gr. Trag. ii. 557, Hartung, Eur. Restitut. ii. 430. The play was written between 412 and 406 B.C. (v. Italie, ix-xi).

The framework is dictated partly by the natural order of events discernible in the fragments, but especially by the stichometric letters which are read in the margins in six places :

δ = line 400 of the play, fr. 1 col. v. 3 ed. pr. (small fragm. of iambic dialogue between Amphiaraus and Hypsipyle).

ζ = line 600 of the play, fr. 25 col. ii. 1 (metre and subject unknown).

η = line 700 of the play, fr. 26, 2 (metre and subject unknown).

θ = line 800 of the play, fr. 27, 1 (metre iambic, subject probably dialogue between Hyps. and Eurydice).

λ = line 1100 of the play, fr. 57, 17 (part of a choral lyric which included references to Dionysus).

EURIPIDES

π = line 1600 of the play, fr. 64 col. ii. 79 (from the dialogue between Hyps. and her sons).

Dramatis Personae: Hypsipyle, formerly wife of Jason, now nurse of the child Opheltes in the palace of Lycurgus and Eurydice at Nemea.

Thoas } sons of Hypsipyle.
Eunéus }

Amphiaraus, a seer, one of the Seven against Thebes.

Eurydice, queen of Nemea, and wife of Lycurgus.

Opheltes (later Archemorus), son of Eurydice and Lycurgus.

Chorus of Nemean Women, well-disposed toward Hypsipyle.

Scene: Before the palace of Lycurgus at Nemea.

Prologus. 1-200^a: Hypsipyle narrates her past history and present circumstances: she was formerly queen of Lemnos, but is to-day a servant in the palace at Nemea, and nurse of the royal child Opheltes. She returns to the palace. Enter Eunéus and Thoas. They knock on the door. Hypsipyle appears with Opheltes in her arms. They are admitted to the palace: Hypsipyle is left alone with Opheltes, to whom she sings (vv. 1-29 of my text).

Parodus. 200-310. A chorus of Nemean women enters. They sing a strophe and antistrophe, each with a lyric response from Hypsipyle. The chorus wonders that she is still thinking of her distant home while such great events are occurring in Nemea—the march of the Seven through Nemea against Thebes. Hypsipyle replies that her heart is far away with the Argonauts and Lemnos. The chorus quotes other heroines whose plight was similar to hers, but worse. Hypsipyle refuses to be comforted (vv. 30-98 of my text).

First Episode. 310-480 (proved by stichometric δ). Amphiaraus arrives. He makes himself known to Hypsipyle; explains the expedition of the Seven against Thebes; and tells the story of Eriphyle's necklace. He appeals to Hypsipyle to shew him a stream of pure water for holy libation on behalf of his army. Hypsipyle consents (Fr. 753 Nauck, δείξω μὲν Ἀργείοισιν Ἀχελώϊου ῥόον). They depart together (vv. 99-152 of my text).

^a These figures in each case represent approximately the lines of the complete play.

LITERARY POPYRI

First Stasimon. 480-550. The chorus sings of the quarrel of Tydeus and Polynices at Argos; and of their marriage with the daughters of Adrastus (vv. 153-162 of my text).

Second Episode. 550-770. Hypsipyle returns distraught. She describes the death of her charge Opheltes, how she left him lying on the ground while she conducted Amphiaraus to a stream, and how, when she returned, she found that a serpent had stung him to death.

[Herein I follow ed. pr. pp. 24-25. There are, of course, other possibilities, but the objections to them are grave. Vv. 163 sqq. (of my text) must be part of a description of Opheltes' death—it is highly improbable that they are part of a passage in which Hyps. described the stream to Amphiaraus; she would thus emphasize her forgetfulness and carelessness later in leaving Opheltes exposed; and above all it is indispensable that the audience should be acquainted with the manner of Opheltes' death, in some detail, long before Amphiaraus's brief description of it (vv. 248 sqq. of my text, between vv. 1150-1350 of the complete play). It is possible that not Hypsipyle but a messenger reported his death: but I agree with ed. pr. in thinking it more likely that Hypsipyle herself was the speaker. V. 206 (of my text) then becomes, as Murray first explained, intelligible: "in vain was my compunction!" cries Hypsipyle, meaning that her self-surrender to Eurydice had not saved her from the extreme penalty. See further p. 78 above]. Thereafter Hypsipyle considers a plan of escape. In the end, perhaps, she resolves to confess her story to Eurydice (vv. 163-183 of my text).

Second Stasimon. 700-770. [Subject unknown.]

Third Episode. 770-1080. [Here there is a gap in our knowledge of the action. There is not much doubt about the course of events so far ; their nature is dictated by the fragments themselves, and their position in the play fairly secured by the stichometrical sign for line 400. We tread safe ground again at v. 1100, from which point the fragments and two stichometric letters define the course and position of events very clearly. But between v. 770 and v. 1100 we have very little to guide us. It is however possible to say this much :— corresponding to this gap of 300 lines, there is obviously a gap in the action of the play. For Hypsipyle later recognizes Eunéus and Thoas to be her own sons : these two must therefore have played a part of some importance in the play—yet so far they have done nothing except enter the palace in the Prologus. Further, since it is Amphiaraus who makes her sons known to Hypsipyle, there must have been a scene in which his knowledge of her sons (whom he has not yet met) was explained. How this was done is obscure. Possibly Eunéus and Thoas were appointed executioners of Hypsipyle—Eurydice might well turn to them in the absence of Lycurgus ; then Eurydice, having yielded later to the plea of Amphiaraus, might mention them to him. Or perhaps Hypsipyle sent Eunéus and Thoas to fetch Amphiaraus to help her in return for her earlier courtesy to him. [So ed. pr. : their objection, that Amph.'s return seems spontaneous, is not a very strong one]. Conceivably the sons were helping Hypsipyle to escape : but, if so, it is hard to see how this could have brought them into contact with Amphiaraus ; except in connexion with the theory that they enlisted the help of Amphiaraus in her rescue. Whether one or two episodes are missing is of course unknown.]

? Third Stasimon. 1080-1150 (proved by stichometric λ). The Chorus sings praise of Dionysus and implores his aid for Hypsipyle.

? Fourth Episode. 1150-1350. Hypsipyle is led out to her death. She pleads with Eurydice, in vain. She is in despair when at the eleventh hour Amphiarauus arrives and recounts the true story of Opheltes' death. Eurydice had charged Hypsipyle with deliberate murder: Amphiarauus explains that the death was accidental, caused by a serpent while Hypsipyle was performing a pious service for the Argive army. He foretells the failure of the Theban expedition, and the institution of the Nemean Games in memory of Opheltes. Eurydice listens to him, and spares Hypsipyle (vv. 184-292 of my text).

?Fourth Stasimon. 1350-1375. [Subject uncertain.]

Exodus. 1375-1720 (proved by stichometric π). Amphiaraus makes mother and sons known to each other. He departs, and they converse. Dionysus appears ex machina (his name is written in the margin of fr. 64 col. iii. 2 ed. pr.). He probably directed Eunéus to go to Athens and found the famous guild of musicians there called Εὐνεῖδαι (ed. pr. p. 28).—Dionysus Melpomenus was the object of their family cult (vv. 293-341 of my text).

(From the Prologus)

HYPS. Father comes soon! ^a Many a pretty toy he brings you to soothe your heart from sorrow.—

(She observes Thoas and Eunéus.) Was it you, gentlemen, who knocked on the gate? How enviable your mother, whoever she was! What need you of our palace, that you come here?

THOAS. Lady, we wish to be brought inside the house, if we can lodge here a single night. All that we need, we have. We shall make no trouble here; you shall remain undisturbed.

HYPS. It happens, the house has no master here

(A few lines missing: fragments of two survive)

HYPS. Lycurgus himself chances to be on pilgrimage; his wife—Eurydice—at present rules in Nemea.

THOAS. Then we will not rest in these lodgings; we must be off to some other house.

HYPS. Ah, no! It is not the practice of this palace to turn the newcomer away disregarded: rather, it welcomes every stranger. . . .

^a This was about v. 180 of the play (see ed. pr. pp. 21, 23).

HYPS. . . . like the dark gleam in a mirror : that with song, while you grow from babe to boy, I may^a woo you, or with smile and service. Look at the rattle ! There, it sounds !

No chant of Lemnos, no song to comfort me beside my weaving, beside the shuttle pressed upon the web, O Muse, is mine to sing : only what is apt to charm a little child to sleep or joy or comfort—this is the burden of my song.

(Parodus)

CHORUS. What make you at the doorway, friend ? Sweeping the entrance to the palace, or sprinkling water on the ground, like a slave ? Are you singing of Argo's fifty rowers—her tale is ever on your lips—or the holy fleece of golden wool which on the oak-tree's bough the unsleeping dragon guards ? Are your thoughts with island Lemnos, that rings with the thunder of the Aegean's rolling waters ? Hither meantime, over the meadows of Nemea, Adrastus, armed with bronze, fleet of foot, brings war apace, AMPH. It is my wish to fill our pitchers from running waters, to pour the traveller's libation to the gods. Streams of standing water are not clear, all muddied by our unnumbered host.

HYPS. Who are you? From what country do you come?

AMPH. Mycenae; we are Argives; crossing our frontiers to another land, we wish to make sacrifice for the Danaid army. We have set forth towards the gates of Cadmus, lady,—if only the gods may speed us with good fortune.

HYPS. Why do you march—if I may learn this of you?

AMPH. To restore Polynices, now in exile from his land.

HYPS. Is it your pleasure, queen, to slay me in evil temper, before you learn all the truth of this? What, silent? No answer? Woe is me—I have not many tears for death, only for the false thought that I killed your son, the babe I nursed, whom in my arms I fed, whom in all—save that I bore him not—I loved as my own child, my own great comfort. O prow of Argo, and water whitening from the spray, O my two sons, how miserably I perish! O prophet, son of Oecles, death is upon me. Come, save me, see me not suffer death from a shameful charge! For your fault I die. Come—for you know my story—and the queen may accept your word as true witness of my woe. Take me—I see no friend at hand to save me. It seems, my compassion was in vain.^a

(Amphiaraus enters)

AMPH. Stop! You that send this woman to her doom!—Queen of this palace you must be: for at a glance I see in you nobility as well as grace.

HYPS. Now at your knees I implore you, Amphiaraus, falling here, and by your beard and by Apollo's art; timely in my hour of danger you are come. Save my life! It is for your sake I am ruined and about to die, at your knees, as you behold, in chains—lately companion of your foreign host. You are a holy man; holy shall be your deed; betray me, and your name shall spell disgrace to Argos and to Hellas. You that see the fortunes of the Danaï in the flame of holy sacrifices, tell her what befell her son! You know it, you were there. Of set purpose, she says, I killed him—I made a plot against the palace!

AMPH. I knew before I came; I divined your fate, and all you must suffer because her son has breathed his last. And I am here to aid you in your distress, armed not with power but piety. For I should be ashamed if I had skill to win a kindness from you; then having won it, to do no kindness in return. (To Eurydice) Now first, unveil your head, stranger queen. Far goes the tale through Hellas, that my gaze is modest. And this, lady, is my nature—self-discipline, and a discerning eye.^a Next listen, and stay your haste. Err about all things else; but not against the life of man or woman—that is sin!

EURY. Stranger, whose land is Argos's neighbour, from all men's words I know your modest temper; else you had never stood and looked upon these eyes. Now, if you will, I am ready to hear you and to inform you. For you deserve it.

AMPH. Lady, it is my will to appease your temper, seeing you bear so harshly this poor woman's wrong: respecting not her so much as justice. I should feel shame before Phoebus, whose art I practise through the flame of sacrifice, if I speak any falsehood. By me persuaded, this woman made known to us a sparkling fountain, that with holy waters I might (make) an offering for the army, crossing the bounds of Argos . . .

Many shall yield to the men of Cadmus's town, vanquished in battle : many go, but few shall come home again. Alone of seven commanders Adrastus shall be saved, shall escape the foeman's grasp and come back from Thebes to Argos. Thus what has come to pass, clearly you understand. What now I counsel, lady, take in good part from me. No man was ever born, but he must suffer ; he buries his children and gets others in their place ; then dies himself. And yet men bear it hard, that only give dust to dust ! Life is a harvest that man must reap like ears of corn ; one grows, another falls. Why should we moan at this, the path of Nature that we must tread ? Give us your son, that we—bringing from Argos all that our duty owes—may bury him in a grave of remembrance everlasting. MELANIPPE CAPTIVE

[(a) 2 B.C. (Schub.-Wil.)

[(b) Parchment 5 A.D.]

Wiss. 1921, 63 (including notes of H. Petersen); Pickard-Cambridge, New Chapters, iii. 117; Beloch, Hermes, 19, 604; Wünsch, Rh. Mus. 49, 91; von Arnim, Suppl. Eur. p. 32; Hunt, F.T.P.*

Aeolus, discovering that his daughter Melanippe had borne twins, disbelieved her story that Poseidon was the father. He sent her to Italy in the charge of the king of Metapontum, who happened to be travelling in Thessaly (Diod. Sic. iv. 67 Αἰόλος . . . παρέδωκε τὴν Ἄρην Μεταποντίῳ ξένῳ κατὰ τύχην παρεπιδημοῦντι, προστάξας ἀπάγειν εἰς Μεταπόντιον : Arne is the lady who replaces Melanippe in Diodorus's version).

Melanippe bore twins, Bocotus and Aeolus, in the house of the Italian king. These were exposed, but reared by shepherds. Years later, Metapontius (as we will call the king) adopted them as successors to his throne^a : no one was then aware of their identity, except perhaps an old shepherd, who so far held his peace.

Now the king's wife (Theano, Hyginus 186 ; Autolyte, Diod. iv. 67) bore sons thereafter, and plotted to destroy Boeotus and Aeolus, against whom she conceived a natural jealousy for their favour with the king. Melanippe discovered the plot—which was, that the queen's uncles should kill Boeotus and Aeolus while hunting—and learnt too that the doomed boys were her own sons. [Perhaps the old shepherd, who had reared them and knew their identity, heard the plot and discovered all to Melanippe, imploring her to assist them.] But the queen learnt the truth, and imprisoned Melanippe—who may have held some position of menial trust in the palace, like that of Hypsipyle at the court of Nemea. It is possible that the absence of the king may explain his queen's opportunity to act thus.

The plot failed. Our second fragment describes the assault upon the sons of Melanippe, who defended themselves successfully and slew their would-be murderers, the brothers of the queen : but not before these had explained to the youths their "ignoble" birth—evidently the queen's brothers knew (perhaps the queen told them) that the youths were exposed children, reared by a shepherd on the hills.

Boeotus and Aeolus returned, and heard (perhaps from the chorus) that Melanippe was imprisoned for intervention on their behalf. They liberated her, and she proved to them that they were her sons. We do not know how the scene was composed. It is possible that it was very brief (see below): Melanippe greeted the youths as her sons; they were sceptical; Melanippe had no sure means of proof; but Poseidon appeared and told all the truth—the god from the machine prophesied the wanderings of Aeolus and Boeotus, and perhaps ordained a wedding between Melanippe and the king (who may have returned to find his wife and her brothers dead, and therefore was about to punish Melanippe and her sons). We do not know exactly how and at what point the suicide of the queen occurred.

This is a typically Euripidean plot: my summary is based upon the fragments themselves, Hyginus 186, and Diodorus iv. 67. It is of course only hypothetical: for none of the fragments except the Messenger's Speech is very helpful; Hyginus is clearly, as that very speech proves, not paraphrasing Euripides' play; and Diodorus gives a version in which Melanippe plays no part at all, the role usually assigned to her being given to one Arne. All we can say is that the above summary (including a few traits from the fragments) is true of what Eur. found before him when he composed his play. How far he diverged from it, we do not know.

The above reconstruction solves the three problems hitherto held insoluble (but v. Pickard-Cambridge, loc. cit.)—first, the part played by Melanippe herself. The person after whom a play is named is usually, if not always, an important character in it. On my view, Melanippe may have played a part almost as important as that of Hypsipyle in the play which bears her name: her imprisonment may have occurred more than half way through the play, her release towards the end (after the Messenger's speech).—Second, the manner in which Melanippe came to Metapontum. Thessaly is too far away: there can be no direct contact between it and Metapontum (which is certainly the scene of this play, see Strabo vi. 265 ἐνταῦθα (sc. in Metapontum) καὶ τὸν Μετάποντον μυθεύουσι καὶ τὴν Μελανίππην δεσμώτην καὶ τὸν ἐξ αὐτῆς Βουωτόν, and Wilam. Sitzb. preuss. Akad. p. 69) in this play: and Aeolus cannot have had any part in it. Melanippe herself must have been in Metapontum from the start.— Thirdly, though Melanippe must, for this play, bear her sons in Metapontum, she must not know that these are her sons when this play begins, nor must they know that she is their mother. Later, they must recognize each other.

Beyond this we cannot venture : except to say that (1) the prologue must have been spoken by a divinity (Poseidon), since none of the human characters could have given the necessary explanation about Melanippe's sons ; (2) the play must have ended fairly soon (about 350 lines ?) after the Messenger's speech (see Wilam. loc. cit., and ed. pr. p. 87). In this interval, we must imagine that Melanippe was liberated, Theano died, and Poseidon spoke from the machine.

They manage the home, and guard within the house the sea-borne wares. No house is clean or prosperous if the wife is absent. And in religion—highest I judge this claim—we play the greatest part. In the oracles of Phoebus, women expound Apollo's will ; and at the holy seat of Dodona, beside the sacred oak, woman conveys the will of Zeus to all Greeks who may desire it. As for the holy rites performed for the Fates and the Nameless Goddesses—they are not holy in the hands of men ; among women they flourish all. So righteous is woman's part in holy service. How then

“WHO was it cast this vain shaft at me?” Now since we revealed not ourselves, but stayed in silence, far off he turned again towards him, and came running, eager to catch the prey. Then he cried out. At once we revealed ourselves, standing upright, and our lances brought death on apace. Forward your brothers pressed to share the spear-men’s onslaught; from us came stones and boulders, some on this side, some on that: but as the battle advanced, and there was silence on our side, they understood all at last and spoke: “Brothers of our dear mother, what are you about, that we catch you slaying those whom you should treat so least of all? For God’s sake, do not so!”

Your brothers lifted a great stone, and cried, “You are the sons of some slave-girl; you have no

Our shafts fell idly to the ground ; the younger of your two brothers was struck through the heart by the broad spear destined for the boar ; and his fine corpse was given over to the dead by him, Boeotus, who struck the former one and slew him. Thereupon we, the remnant of his friends, turned our nimble feet to flight, each a different path. One man I saw hidden in the leafy forest on the mountain, another on the boughs of a pine ; others climbed down to a ravine, some crouched beneath dark shadowy bushes. They saw us, but thought it not well that swords of noblemen should butcher slaves. This is my story : your brothers are no more. For my part, I know not whereby one must judge nobility. Men brave in character and just, albeit sons of slaves, are nobler, I say, than the vain pretentious.

Now I must recall my tale to the point where I began—to my own name. They call me Melanippe; the daughter of Chiron bore me to Aeolus. Her—because she chanted songs of prophecy to men, expounding remedies and release from pain^a—Zeus covered with the plumage of bay horse's hair; thick fell a tempest from Heaven, and she was driven forth, and left the Corycian mountain of the Muses. ΠΕΙΡΙΘΟΟΣ

Ed. pr. (b) *Rabe, Rheinisches Museum, 63, 1908, p. 145; (a and c) *Hunt, P. Oxy. xvii. 1927, no. 2078, p. 36 (2 A.D.).

See von Arnim, Suppl. Eur. 40; Pickard-Cambridge, New Chapters, iii. 148; Wilamowitz, Analecta Euripidea, p. 161; Sitzb. preuss. Akad. 1907, 1; Kuiper, Mnemosyne, 35; Körte, Archiv, x. 1931, 51

The story of the tragedy is this:—Pirithous went to Hades accompanied by Theseus to seek the hand of Persephone in marriage. He was dreadfully punished for his presumption, being chained to a rock guarded by serpents. Theseus would not desert his companion, and elected to live in Hades.

Then Heracles, sent by Eurystheus to fetch Cerberus, accomplished his labour and delivered both Pirithous and Theseus. (Herein was a great innovation: the common story ended with the deliverance of Theseus only.)

In our first fragment Pirithous (perhaps in the Prologos) describes the sin and suffering of his father Ixion. In the second fragment, Acacus observes the approach of Heracles; challenges him, and receives his answer. In the third fragment, Theseus implores Heracles for deliverance.

The great authority of Wilamowitz (who however did not treat the problem fully or in detail) has led many scholars to follow him in denying that Euripides wrote this play. Their only direct evidence is the sentence in Athenaeus (496 b) ὁ τὸν Πειρίθου γράψας, εἶτε Κριτίας ἐστὶν ὁ τύραννος ἢ Εὐριπίδης, and the statement in a Life of Euripides that Tennes, Rhadamanthys and Pirithous were "spurious" dramas.

Kuiper, loc. cit. adequately refutes the charges, (1) that the cosmogony implied in fr. 593 Nauck is impossible for Eur., (2) that Pir. fr. 598 is inconsistent with Eur.'s views about human character, (3) that there is anything un-Euripidean in the language, (4) one or two minor and even more weakly founded charges. He also shews that there is no reason to believe that the doubtful ascription to Critias in Athen. 496 b (cf. Vit. Eur.) is based on good or early authority: on the other side, Pirithous is included among the plays of Eur. on the Piraeus stone (Wilam. Anal. Eur. p. 138)—a most weighty consideration—and is attributed to Eur. by Plutarch, Clement, scholiasts, anthologists, lexicographers and others. The comparative freedom from resolution of the iambic trimeters may only indicate that Pirithous was not among Eur.'s later plays (a conclusion provisionally accepted by Zielinski, Trag. Lib. Tres, p. 228). Hunt's inference from v. 8 of our first fragment is wholly arbitrary (he suggested, from comparison of Or. 36-37, El. 1253, that τροχῶι μανίας should be taken together as a metaphor, i.e. that Ixion's wheel was in this play made a mere figure of speech, his myth rationalized: this would not be surprising if the poet were the Critias who wrote Sisyphus fr. 1 Nauck, where the same rationalizing tendency can be observed in the allegation that the gods are only an utilitarian invention. But (1) since the ends of the lines are missing, we do not know whether μανίας should be taken with τροχῶι or not—it is very easy to avoid taking it so; (2) even if the myth was thus rationalized—which we do not know—it would not be the first instance of such rationalism in Euripides: no need to look beyond him to a Critias).

It is further alleged that the scene of the action must have been set partly in Hades, partly on earth: the principal events certainly occurred in Hades; but the Chorus, which sings to Zeus, and calls upon the Aether, must have been outside Hades in the daylight. This is very far from certain. It is most reasonable to suppose that the Chorus was a band of Initiate Souls in Hades, like the Chorus of Initiates in Aristo-phanes' Frogs.^a There need be no change of scene. And even if there was a change of scene, and if Hades as the scene is itself considered strange and unprecedented, I do not see that the ascription to Critias at the end of Euripides' life is a better solution than the ascription to Euripides himself a few years earlier.

In conclusion : the direct testimonies, quoted above, create a sense of uncertainty which nothing can dispel ; but modern scholarship has failed to add much, if any, strength to them. On the whole the balance of evidence is in favour of Euripidean authorship : though we still know far too little about the play to permit a definite conclusion. I defer to the consensus of ancient opinion in publishing the play under the name of Euripides.

(a) PIRITHOUS. Now when he was just freed from madness, God sent infatuation upon him ; he seized a cloud, made in the likeness of a woman, and spread among the Thessalians an impious rumour,—that he embraced the daughter of Cronus in fruitful union. For that vain boast thereafter he paid to heaven a just penalty ; . . . Zeus took and hid him in the sky's abyss, far from the knowledge of man. There he was torn asunder by northern gales—he, my father, his retribution suited to his boasting, whereby he had sinned against the gods. And I, bearing his agonies riddled in my name,^b am called Pirithous, and my fortunes are like his. . . .

(b) AEACUS. What is this ? I see a figure hastening hither apace—bold is his spirit indeed ! Stranger, you must tell me who you are that come near these regions, and what matter brings you.

indeed a band of Initiates, a reason must have been given why they should appear in the same scene as Pirithous ; their normal haunts would of course be separate from his place of punishment. But a reason could easily have been found : Pirithous is being punished for a crime against Persephone—the chorus, if (like that of Ar. Ran.) it consists of “ dead ” Eleusinian Initiates, is a devotee of Persephone. It would not require much ingenuity to bring together Persephone's worshippers with her captive enemy. ^b He derives his name from peri and thoos, circling and swift—Ixion his father was bound to a wheel.

HERACLES. I fear not to unfold all my story. My fatherland is Argos, my name is Heracles. And I am son of Zeus, the father of all the gods : for Zeus—so runs the tale of truth—came to my good mother's bed. And I come hither perforce, obedient to the commands of Eurystheus who sent me and bade me fetch the hound of Hades living to the gates of Mycenae,—not that he wished to see it, but he deemed that he had found therein a labour that I could not accomplish. In quest of this business I have travelled round about to the farthest ends of Europe and of all Asia. . . .

(c) THESEUS. . . . for it is shameful to betray a loyal friend, when captive of the foe.

HERACLES. Theseus, your speech does honour due to Athens and yourself. You were ever champion of the oppressed. Yet it were shame for me to return home with excuses on my lips. How gladly, think you, would Eurystheus say—if he heard I did this with your help—that my task and toil were unfulfilled ?

THESEUS. For your desire, all my goodwill is with you : not given in heat, but freely, hating them that hate, but to friends favourable. Such were you once to me, as all men tell ; and now you shall say the same. . . .

Bellerophon had fled from Corinth to the palace of Proetus at Tiryns, where he was purified of homicide. Stheneboea, wife of Proetus, made advances to him, which he rejected (she employed a Nurse as go-between). In the prologue, Bellerophon resolves to leave Tiryns, in order to avoid dishonour for himself if he yields to Stheneboea, and for Proetus if he should denounce the queen. Proetus however listened to the slanders which his humiliated wife uttered against his guest, and sent Bellerophon to King Iobates of Caria with a secret message bidding Iobates to slay him. Iobates sent Bellerophon forth to fight the Chimaera, thinking that he would not return; but Bellerophon accomplished this labour, and returned enraged to Tiryns, borne by Pegasus. destroy him, he feigned compliance with Stheneboea's reiterated advances ; he proposed to her that she should fly with him on Pegasus to Asia Minor. She assented : but while they were flying near Melos, Bellerophon threw her down into the sea. Her body was recovered by fishermen, who brought it to Corinth ; whither Bellerophon also returned, and justified himself before Proetus.

This was a remarkable tragedy. The introduction of Pegasus—a real horse, probably, adorned with artificial wings—on to the stage, had perhaps no precedent, and was certainly a bolder innovation of its kind than anything since the chariot of Oceanus in Aeschylus's Prometheus. Even more surprising is the disrespect for the common unity of time.—Two long intervals must have elapsed during the action of the play, (1) while Bellerophon went to Asia Minor and performed labours at the command of Iobates ; (2) while Bellerophon and Stheneboea flew away from Corinth on their winged horse.

Further, the duplication of the plots against the life of Bellerophon, and of his temptation by Stheneboea, is indeed astonishing. (It is probable that Stheneboea's death at the hands of Bellerophon was an Euripidean innovation in the story.)

BELLEROPHON. No man in the world is happy in all ways : either his birth is noble, but he has no livelihood ; or he ploughs wealthy fields, but his birth is humble. Many are proud of riches and noble birth together, yet a foolish wife at home brings shame upon them. Such is the affliction of Proetus, who rules this country. I came here as a guest and suppliant of this palace ; her tongue beguiles me

But I have good respect for law and Zeus, the suppliant's god; and esteem for Proetus, who received me into his house when I left the land of Sisyphus, and washed my hands clean of murder, with blood of new slaughter shed above them; so never yet have I consented to listen to her plea, nor to offend against this stricken house, where I am a guest: and I abhor that dangerous passion which destroys the soul of man. Two kinds of love there are, that live on earth:—one, our worst enemy, leads to death; the other leads to virtue and a good life—coveted by men such as I would be! Better, I think, that a man be virtuous, though he should die for it. (?)

Now I would go forth into the fields. I do myself no service sitting in the palace, and listening to abuse because I will not sin: nor yet denouncing her and bringing shame on the wife of Proetus, and rending the house in twain . . .

For the legend see our preface to Sophocles' Ἀχαιῶν Σύλλογος: from which it will be evident that Sophocles' treatment of the theme gave little scope for tense or profound drama. But the Telephus of Euripides was a most original and interesting character. The action of the play was partly concerned with a dissension in the Greek army; Agamemnon being eager, and Menelaus reluctant, to abandon the expedition against Troy. And Telephus himself took for his model the crafty Athenian politician, a cunning fellow thriving on stratagem and deception. First, he disguised himself as a beggar in rags; then he sought to win Agamemnon over with sly arguments; being unsuccessful, he boldly seized the infant Orestes and held him as hostage until Agamemnon yielded. [This feature was not invented by Euripides: vases prove it to be earlier, and tradition assigned it to Aeschylus, see Wilamowitz, loc. cit. pp. 69-70.] Finally he prevailed upon Achilles with another display of specious and sophistical argument. The fragments do not allow us to follow Telephus pleading his own cause as if he were another person, and later betraying his own identity; but there was evident occasion for surprise and subtlety. We see clearly how Euripides could transform a slow and stately legend into a breathless drama of intrigue and suspense; and how obviously he merited the accusation that he was abasing the dignity of his profession. But the Athenians never forgot the rags and tatters of his Telephus.

The play was produced in 438 B.C. together with Alcmeon through Psophis, Cretan Women, and Alcestis. Vv. 1-7 (to Εὐλείθια) = fr. 696 N.: v. 13 = fab. incert fr. 884 N.

?AESCHYLUS, MYRMIDONS [1-2 A.D.]

The ascription of these lines to Aeschylus is based upon the form δαί at the end of v. 8: for the only other iambic trimeter which ends with this form of the preposition (i.e. in which the form, when it occurs in an iambic trimeter, is not required by the metre) is Aeschylean, viz. Cho. 656; cf. Aesch. fr. 296 Nauck, δαί at the end of a trochaic tetrameter. This evidence is surely insufficient; there is no reason why

LITERARY POPYRI

Sophocles, Euripides and others should not have used the form in this way; the fact that it is not so used in their extant works is a reply that may be confuted by the next discovery of a tragic fragment in a papyrus. It is not as if forms of this kind were in themselves peculiarly Aeschylean. διαί occurs only in Aeschylus (also Agam. 448, 1133, 1453, 1485, Cho. 610 lyrics); but ἵπαι, found in Aeschylus, Agam. 892, 944, Eum. 417, occurs also in Sophocles, El. 711, Ant. 1035 (all in iambic trimeters); Aesch. Agam. 1164, Cho. 615 (both lyric, and both probably false readings); Euripides, El. 1187 (lyric); and in the fragment (p. 22) which is probably part of Sophocles' Inachus, a satyric play, v. 9 (lyric); cf. Aristophanes, Ach. 970, Av. 1426 (iambic trimeters, parodies of tragic style).

If we turn to the style of the fragment, we find that although it is perhaps more like that of Aeschylus than that of Sophocles or Euripides, it is not really like the style of Aeschylus. It lacks the power and colour and metaphor of Aeschylean language; it is indeed very simple and direct, clear and unadorned^a; its boldest metaphors are "shepherd" for Agamemnon and "healer of evils"—perhaps introduced with an apology—for death; the only word in the vocabulary which might suggest Aeschylus is πολυσκεδεῖς v. 16, a new (but comparatively tame) compound.

The details of the linguistic evidence, apart from διαί, afford no helpful criterion. There are several points of construction, vocabulary, etc., which do not occur in Aeschylus: but there is perhaps nothing that could not have occurred in his work. The rare word προδοσία v. 20 is not found elsewhere in Tragic iambic trimeters (or in indeed in Tragedy at all, except Eur. Hel. 1633, troch. tetr.), but no secure inference can be made on this basis. The details can be found in Stella, loc. cit. : with whom I agree further that the character of Achilles here is not typically Aeschylean ; he is psychologically more advanced, more sophisticated and argumentative, more interested in himself and his own motives and actions, than we expect in Aeschylus. True, the nature of the action may have demanded such a character : the point is that although such a character is not impossible for an Aeschylean play, it certainly is not typical of one.

The most that can be said in favour of the ascription to Aeschylus is this : that the fragment comes from just such a scene as we imagine Aeschylus's Myrmidons to have included ; that the form of a preposition in -αι, used without metrical necessity, does not in fact occur in Tragic iambics outside Aeschylus ; and that the style and character of the speaker, though not Aeschylean, are not impossible to reconcile with Aeschylus.

This evidence, though not lightly to be dismissed, is insufficient for the important conclusion which it purports to prove. It remains undeniable that the fragment may proceed from the hand of another writer. If Sophocles and Euripides are thought unlikely candidates for authorship, we must still remember that Achilles was the hero of plays written by Astydamas, Carcinus and others ; and we have long ago been forced to abandon the assumption that a tragic fragment found in a papyrus of the 1st or 2nd century A.D. must automatically be ascribed to one of the three great Tragedians. It is clear that the only scientific verdict must be :—" Anonymous ; perhaps from the Myrmidons of Aeschylus."

LITERARY PAPYRI

The following reconstruction of this fragment is based on the assumption, likely but far from certain, that it proceeds from a play on the subject of Telephus's adventures in Hellas. In one account of the legend (Nauck, T.G.F. p. 579; Pearson, The Fragments of Sophocles, i. 94) Telephus prevailed upon Achilles to heal the wound which he himself had inflicted, by seizing the infant Orestes and threatening to kill him unless Achilles complied. Our fragment may belong to a play on this theme. It will then deal with the following portion of the plot:—Telephus is to win over the fleet; then someone is to assist him to penetrate the royal palace; there has been a proclamation—designed specially to impede Telephus—that no foreigner may be admitted to the palace; so Telephus will go dressed as an ἀστός, an ordinary citizen. Vv. 5-8 mean that Telephus will enter the palace on the pretext that he has come to seek justice, which has been denied him by the chieftains of the state. Once inside, he will take his opportunity to seize Orestes. (His enterprise was traditionally made easier by the complicity of Clytemnestra.) Webster (loc. cit.) argues differently. In his view, our fragment ends shortly before the fragment of Ach. Syll. (p. 12) begins: it is the end of the scene before the arrival of Achilles. Odysseus here is sending Telephus to the fleet, himself awaiting Achilles, whom he must persuade to heal Telephus. κηρύκειον refers to a proclamation made in deference to an oracle that "no foreigner may lead the Greek army to Troy." This idea has in its favour the close connexion between our fragment, ἀσὸς γὰρ ὡς etc., and the passage in the Ach. Syll. fragment in which Telephus, who has clearly been accepted as guide already, is emphatically denoted as "a Tegeate, no child of Mysia," i.e. a Greek, not a foreigner. But it leaves vv. 8-9 very difficult: Webster (reading ξένον or ξένους at the beginning of v. 7) translates "Foreigners, as the decree runs, the chiefs forbid to use Greek right and law" (my romans). Apart from the sense given to ὡς ὁ μῦθος ἐστὶ, this is a most unnatural way of saying that the chiefs forbid foreigners to guide the Greek fleet to Troy (which, in Webster's view, was the content of the decree).

But the whole problem is difficult: I do not say that Webster's view is more open to objection than that of Roberts and myself. The divergence and doubt shew clearly how dangerously hypothetical these reconstructions may be. The evidence for Sophocles' authorship itself is not very strong. There is nothing to contradict it: the words ἀμνηστειν, κηρύκειον (elsewhere in Tragedy adjectival) and ὑπεξελεῖν (in the sense "remove objections") are found in Sophocles, but not in Aesch. or Eur. It is clear that evidence for Sophocles' authorship could well be a good deal stronger. The ascription to a play concerned with Telephus is based on the vocative Τήλεφ' in v. 1.

— Then, Telephus, go down to the . . . appear by night and give this signal to the sailors and the pilots. Then . . . the task is yours: go and assist the fleet in counsel. For since our chieftains (thus our story runs) forbade him from the first the use of justice and the laws of Hellas, failing of that good fortune he makes bold to assail the palace. He shall Blass conjectured that this fragment is part of a scene in which Artemis (v. 1) drives or has driven from the house (v. 2) someone (probably a girl, v. 10) who is in danger of death at her hands (v. 9); probably Artemis is shooting at her with bow and arrows (v. 3).

He suggested further that the fragment comes from Sophocles' Niobe. Apollodorus (iii. 47) relates that Niobe returned to Lydia after her children's death: now Hom. II. xxiv. 602 Schol. Townl. states that this was a feature of Sophocles' Niobe. It is therefore inferred that Apollodorus is following Sophocles when he says that Artemis shot down

So it is inferred that our fragment represents the shooting of one of the daughters by Artemis. Since however the inferences both about the action of our fragment and about the nature of Sophocles' plot are by no means certain, I have not included this piece among the fragments of Sophocles. The evidence, which I have given (see further Pearson, p. 96), for believing that Apollodorus gives the story of Sophocles' play, is not very strong.^a As for the fragment itself, it is not certain that Artemis plays any direct part in its action; there is no mention of Niobe or a Niobid. All that is fairly certain is that a girl (v. 10) is on the stage in danger of death (v. 9). So far as we can judge, the fragment suggests the slaying of a Niobid by Artemis; but this is no more than a

But the reading of Π in v. 5 καὶ μάγους πάγας is difficult to reconcile with a reference to Niobe: it would certainly suit e.g. Medea or Circe better. And λθ. εἰκ. might easily be part of an allusion to Niobe in a passage which concerns some other character; or it might refer to Medusa.

The weakness of the evidence, both for ascription to Sophocles and for assignment to a play about Niobe, is obvious: following a hint from Pfeiffer, loc. cit., I have returned to the text of the papyrus itself, and printed it as an anonymous and unidentified fragment. ? SOPHOCLES, TYRO

[3 B.C.]

The story of Tyro was in outline as follows (there are many divergences in detail):—

Tyro, daughter of Salmoneus and Alcidice, bore Pelias and Neleus to Poseidon. She exposed them in a little boat. When they grew up, they discovered their mother and slew her stepmother Sidero, by whom she had been persecuted.

LITERARY PAPYRI

Little is known about the detail of the action of this story in Sophocles' Tyro. The recognition of mother and sons occurred towards the end of the play (Eur. Or. 1691 Schol.), and was effected by means of tokens (πηρίδιον γνωρισμάτων Menander, Epitr. 114, referring to this play) and the boat in which they were exposed (Aristotle Poet. 16, 1454 b 25, Aristoph. Lys. 158 Schol., bronze situla in Pickard-Cambridge, p. 104). We know further that the result of Sidero's maltreatment of Tyro was portrayed by means of an actor's mask (Pollux 4. 141). From Men. Epitr. loc. cit. we infer that the exposed children were discovered and reared by a shepherd, who later told them his story, and sent them forth with the "little box of tokens" to find their parents.

It is likely that the recognition took place when Tyro was drawing water from a well (archaeological evidence, see Engelmann, Arch. Stud. p. 40); and that in the end Poseidon appeared ex machina and announced that he was indeed the father of the children (Ar. Lys. 138). It is highly probable that Salmoneus was still alive and played a part; and that Poseidon ordered his brother Cretheus to marry Tyro (Pearson, p. 273).

The investigation is complicated by the fact that Sophocles wrote two plays on this subject: perhaps, as Wecker believed, the second Tyro was only a revision of the first. At any rate, there is not evidence enough to determine fully the action of one Tyro, let alone two.

*Now what is the evidence that our fragment belongs to this obscure play? (1) The reference to the river Alpheus (v. 4) is consistent with the fact that Elis was the adopted home of Salmoneus: it is uncertain but likely that Elis was the scene of the action in Sophocles (Pearson, p. 273). (2) The terrible dream in vv. 1, 3 "fits certain extant fragments of the Tyro (especially fr. 660, 661); but this is a very lame argument, as may be seen by a reference to the passages in question" (Pearson). (3) "The prayer in vv. 5-6, addressed to Poseidon, is entirely appropriate to the sons of Tyro" (id.). (4) If the reading Πελ[α]s were secure in v. 5, the case would be greatly strengthened. (It would not be "decisive": Carcinus and Astydamas also wrote plays on this theme.) But the reading is extremely uncertain in that place: the σ is doubtful; the α is very doubtful; the ι is a mere trace which could belong to any one of several letters. This evidence is very weak.

*The plot of Euripides' Meleager was briefly as follows:

In the prologue, Artemis explained that Oeneus, king of Calydon, had forgotten her when sacrificing the first fruits of the harvest to the gods: she had therefore sent a boar to ravage the land. Among the heroes assembled to chase the boar was Meleager, who insisted (in spite of his companions and of his mother Althaea) that Atalanta should be permitted to take part in the adventure. This quarrel between Althaea and Meleager and Atalanta was portrayed in the play. The story of the chase and its fateful end were narrated by a Messenger:—Oeneus had promised the boar's hide to its slayer. In the event, Atalanta first wounded the boar, Amphiaraus second; then Meleager killed it. He gave the hide to Atalanta. But the Thestiadae, brothers of Althaea, and uncles of Meleager, took it from her, alleging that it belonged to them as next of kin, if Meleager renounced his claim. Meleager in anger killed the Thestiadae and restored the hide to Atalanta, whom he loved. When Althaea heard the Messenger's story, she extinguished the torch which, being quenched, was destined to end the life of Meleager. Towards the end of the play it is likely that Meleager was brought dying on to the scene, and that Althaea killed herself. The play closed with a divine epiphany.

Our fragment, if indeed it belongs to this play, comes from the end of the Messenger's narration; he concluded with the death of the Thestiadae; his interlocutor, probably Oeneus, is appalled at the tidings, but goes on to ask what happened to the prize afterwards. The Messenger says that it was restored to Atalanta. Asked what now Atalanta is about, he perhaps replied that she had fled with Meleager; Oeneus, if Oeneus it is, may then have left the scene to comfort Althaea for her brothers' death and to dissuade her from violent revenge.

OENEUS. Strange, if he made bold to slay them on such a charge! Now this I want to hear: who was the next to seize the wild beast's hide?

MESSENGER. Master, the hearing will not please you: and I have no wish to bring unwelcome tidings to your house.

OENEUS. Hide it not from me, if you know anything about it.

(Two lines missing, and the fragmentary end of a third: then it continues:—)

MESSENGER. . . . he gave the prize back into the hands of her, the maiden daughter of Schoeneus, to do her honour. It was indeed her right, for she had won it long ago.

OENEUS. Now tell me, old servant, where is Atalanta now?

MESSENGER. Master, that also will displease you. Not long ago . . .

? HECTOR

[(a) 2 B.C.]
[(b) c. 100 B.C.]

The time of the action then is later than the death of Patroclus: therefore it is improbable that this fragment is a part of the Hector of Astydamas, whose play certainly contained an incident which occurred much earlier in the story (Iliad vi. 472 Schol., v. Pickard-Cambridge, loc. cit.).

In fr. (b), Snell observed the difference between Homer, Il. xxii. and this play.—Here it is Hector who shoots first, and Achilles who stoops to avoid the missile. Achilles then strikes Hector with his sword (ἐπαισεν, not used of attack with spears), which falls in vain upon the shield—his own shield, now carried by Hector.

There is no evidence, except coincidence of subject-matter, that these two fragments proceed from the same play.

This fragment is preceded in Π by remnants of a column of iambic trimeters in which] τάφον, χ]ώρας ἄπο,] γύναι,] λιτάς,] χοάς can be read at the ends of lines. It appears to be a part of a tragedy composed about events which occurred immediately after the fall of Troy. Ed. pr. observes that for lexical reasons (ἐστέρεσεν, βλαβερά, μακαριστότατον) the fragment is likely to be of post-Euripidean date; and suggests that in the iambic trimeters an unsympathetic character, e.g. Talthybius, warns a Trojan captive, e.g. Hecuba or Andromache, that she must prepare to depart with her new master; thereupon follows the captive's lament.

? HECUBA

[1 A.D.]

The lines present insoluble difficulties ; of which the chief concerns the identity of the speaker. It is certain that a woman speaks : the lines in general, and the references to Hector and to a child in particular, suggest Hecuba or Andromache ; the child in v. 23 will then presumably be Astyanax. If the choice is to be made between Hecuba and Andromache, the former seems slightly preferable. The plural in τέκ]νων ὄνομα ἡδιστον speaks for Hecuba ; the phrase τί γὰρ ἡ τλήμων πάθος οὐκ ἀντλώ is reminiscent of Eur. Tro. 106 τί γὰρ οὐ πάρα μοι μελέαι στενάχαι—spoken by Hecuba ; further, a certain generality of sentiment and breadth of outlook—reference to the fall of Priam's palace, and of Troy, to the instant fate of Trojan virgins (κοῦραι κοῦραι δύστυχοι cries Hecuba, Eur. Tro. 144)—are better suited to the conventional Hecuba than to the conventional Andromache (who would perhaps not have postponed her reference to Astyanax so long). Finally, in vv. 24-25 μετὰ μητρὸς ὁμ[ως οὐ] γεωαμένης (= Hecuba) is a better and more convincing supplement than μετὰ μητρὸς ὁμ[οῦ τῆς] γεωαμένης (= Andromache)—μετὰ . . . ὁμοῦ is a singular combination. These are indeed inconclusive grounds; but at the same time far from negligible.

The next difficulty:—these anapaests are written in Π in a column (short, only 21 vv.) without any regard for metrical lines. The right-hand side of the column is missing. It is therefore quite uncertain how much is missing. Where a line ends μακαριστότατον π[, followed by μέλαθρον in the beginning of the next line, it is obviously tempting to reconstruct the first line on the assumption that π[is π[ριάμου, and that no more is wanting. But the assumption may be false, and the lacunae at the ends of lines much longer. I have however made the assumption, for (1) most of the lines thus admit an easy restoration of good sense; (2) if half a dozen letters only are added to the anapaestic column, that column will be much the same in breadth as the preceding column of iambic trimeters (which did observe the metrical line as a unit). Once more, these reasons are insufficient, but neither are they negligible.

In 20 of these 23 "lines" (as written in Π) the scribe begins a new line with a new word, does not divide a word between two lines. In two lines^a he does make such a division. In one line there is some doubt. The 19th line of col. ii. begins in the Papyrus .ΕΤΥΧΑΣ: the doubtful letter before Ε looks like Ν, but the ink has both run and faded, and Μ—though I admit it seems a fraction too broad for the space—is not impossible. At least, then, it is clear that the scribe did sometimes divide a line between two words; and his reason for doing so was probably, as ed. pr. suggests, to enable him to keep his columns fairly even. The Papyrus ends for its last 11 lines (vv. 13-end, in my text) two or three letters later than it ends for the first 8 lines (vv. 1-12). If no more than π[ριάμου is to be supplied after μακαριστότατον in Π's 12th line, we proceed with the assumption that some five or six letters are missing at the ends of the last 11 lines in Π; and therefore some seven or eight, perhaps eight or nine, at the ends of the first 8 lines in Π.

[Morel, loc. cit., conjectures that our fragment comes from a play which was the original of Ennius's Andromache Aechmalotis: I find no evidence for this view in his article. Körte, quoting Aristotle, Eth. End. vii. 4, 1239 a 37, suggests Antiphon as the author of the piece.]

^a The first of the anapaestic lines (v. 20 of col. i.) ends μονον αλλ ε, and must therefore have divided a word between this line and the next. The next line ends ΟΝΟ followed by ΜΗΔΙΣΤΟΝ at the beginning of col. ii. v. 1.

? OENEUS, or SCHOENEUS, or PHOENIX
[2 A.D.]

Evidently a Satyric drama. The daughter of Oeneus (or possibly—but less probably—Schoeneus) is the prize of a contest in which Satyrs are competing.

LITERARY PAPYRI

Oeneus is known to have arranged such a contest for the hand of his daughter Deianeira; in which Heracles overcame Achelous. Phoenix (who is party to a dialogue in fr. 4 ed. pr., is mentioned in fr. 14 and in a note on fr. 19) was probably another competitor: for he married Perimede, another daughter of Oeneus (Asius ap. Paus. vii. 4. 1)—perhaps, as Hunt suggests, a consolation prize. (Schoeneus also promoted such a contest for the hand of his daughter Atalanta; here too Phoenix is at home, for he took part in the chase of the Calydonian boar.)

The style seems unlike that of Aeschylus or Euripides

(though there is no definite criterion). Sophocles (who wrote a Φοῖνιξ, and perhaps an Οἰνεύς) is a likelier candidate for authorship; Hunt points to Soph. fr. 855, 3-5 Nauck, for a good parallel to the anaphora of εἶσι in vv. 9 sqq. of our fragment. Wilamowitz was inclined to attribute the lines to Ion of Chios, who wrote a Φοῖνιξ ἢ Καυεύς and a Φοῖνιξ δεύτερος. But all this is merest guesswork; there is not sufficient evidence for a decision. [P. Iand. v. p. 179, no. 76, a tiny fragment, may belong to the same play.]

(a) OENEUS. We will speak out: but first I wish to know who you are that come, and of what family—I have not learnt this yet.

CHORUS OF SATYRS. You shall hear everything. We come as suitors, we are sons of nymphs and ministers of Bacchus, and neighbours of the gods. Every proper trade is part of our equipment:—fighting with spears, contests of wrestling, horse-racing, running, boxing, biting, hitting below the belt; here you have songs of music, here you have oracles fully known—not forged,—and tests for medicines; we know the measuring of the skies, we know the way to dance, we know the lore of the world below,—say, is our study fruitless? You may choose whatever of these you will, if you assign your daughter to me.

OENEUS. With your family I find no fault. But first I wish to see who this man is who comes here. . . .

Ino, wife of Athamas, jealous of her rival Nephelē, roasted the corn-seed to make it unfruitful. She then gave it to an old man to sow. Athamas, ignorant of these things, consulted the oracle: but Ino persuaded the envoys to report that the ground would not become fertile unless Athamas would sacrifice his son Phrixus, child of Nephelē. was brought to the altar: but thereupon the old man who had sown the seed betrayed Ino's secret.

The authorship of this fragment is altogether uncertain, for want of sufficient evidence. It could be the work of Sophocles; but nothing proves it. Schadewaldt argues for Euripides: but fails to produce a single strong (let alone conclusive) argument. The fragment may be the work of either of these two poets, or of an unknown poet of the 5th (or even 4th) century. We cannot nowadays assume that a tragic papyrus of the 2nd or 3rd century A.D., however finely written and produced, is a work of one of the three great Tragedians.

? SEVEN AGAINST THEBES [2 A.D.]

was borrowed from Euripides' Phoenissae. There is not even a linguistic coincidence worthy of the name. Further, the style and vocabulary, though generally based upon tragedy of the 5th century, are by no means particularly Euripidean (see below).

(2) There is an obvious similarity of outline to Eur. Ph. 443 sqq. Jocasta has contrived an interview between her sons, hoping that they may still be reconciled by debate and mediation. But there the similarity ends, and the remarkable differences begin. I draw attention to some of them.—

LITERARY POPYRI

Vv. 1-2. A good instance of this poet's complete independence of phraseology : the thought is much the same as that of Eur. Ph. 364-366 (cf. 272-273).

V. 3. Polynices hands his sword over to his mother : this feature is new, not in Eur.'s play : a spectacular innovation.

V. 4. A new and striking element : Jocasta bids Polynices swear that after the ensuing debate he will abide by her verdict. This feature too is absent from Eur. Ph. Here apparently, the brothers have agreed to meet and try to settle their differences by arbitration. In Ph., Jocasta hopes thus to reconcile them ; Polynices is willing and faintly hopeful (435-437) ; Eteocles humours his mother (446 sqq.), but plainly does not intend to be conciliated. Nowhere in Eur. does either brother formally promise to accept and abide by his mother's verdict at the end of the debate. In our fragment there was evidently a dramatic moment when Jocasta insisted that both sons should give to her their swords before the debate began.

V. 6. In Eur.'s play, neither brother addresses the other by name in this scene. Indeed neither speaks directly to the other until the violent quarrel at the end (cf. 455 sqq., they will not even look at each other). Here they begin at once speaking to each other, and Polynices actually addresses his brother by name. This follows from the poet's innovation observed on v. 4 :—the brothers here have agreed to start at least by aiming at a definite reconciliation ; therefore their animosity is at first suppressed, their spirit outwardly milder.

And here is a great difference in structure :—In Eur. Ph., the brothers begin at once by stating their cases in alternate ῥήσεις ; Jocasta then speaks, and the debate is over ; thereupon the brothers quarrel violently in stichomythia in trochiac tetrameters.

In our fragment, the brothers begin their debate in iambic stichomythia. ῥήσεις may or may not have followed this or interrupted it ; but certainly the debate and quarrel go together at the beginning, in iambic stichomythia. Our poet is going out of his way to be different from Euripides.

V. 10. Cf. vv. 13, 23: in Eur., Polynices never, in the presence of Eteocles, speaks of his bringing the Argive army to Thebes, though he does once speak of taking it away; a delicate point, which eluded our poet.

Vv. 11-17. These lines, like so many others in this fragment, do not appear to be based on anything in Eur.'s play, either in sentiment or in phraseology.

V. 19. This sentiment is not expressed in Eur. Ph.

Vv. 22-23. V. note on v. 10.

Vv. 28-29. Nothing corresponding to this sentence (εἰ γὰρ Κύκλωπος εἶχον . . . ψυχὴν ἀβελκτον) occurs in the Euripidean scene.

There are other differences; but these are sufficient to make it clear that this is a fragment of an original Tragedy. The relation to Euripides' Phoenissae is confined to a broad and—with this subject—inevitable similarity of outline. In phraseology, in incident, in structure, and often in spirit and sentiment, the new fragment exhibits not similarity to Euripides, but remarkable divergences from his example. And these divergences are unintelligible except in relation to the whole of which this fragment is part: i.e. the fragment really is a fragment, not a complete and self-contained "exercise."

(b) There follows a brief commentary which is intended to shew that there is nothing here to compel us to assign these lines to a date later than the 4th or 3rd century B.C.

V. 2. φιλάτῃ τεκοῦσα: I have not observed another example in Tragedy of τεκοῦσα vocative without ὦ, nor of the combination φιλάτῃ with τεκοῦσα vocative. But there is no good reason to deny the phrase to a Tragedian of the 4th century (or indeed of the 5th).

παρεθέμην: παραθέσθαι τί τινι "deposit something with someone" is good prose (Hdt., Xen.). παραθέσθαι not in

LITERARY PAPYRI

Aesch. or Soph., in Eur. only Cycl. 390 (in a different sense).

V. 3. αὐτῆι = σεαυτῆι : a peculiar usage, based on such passages as Soph. O.C. 1356 τὸν αὐτὸς αὐτοῦ (= σεαυτοῦ) πατέρα τὸνδ' ἀπήλασας, ibid. 929-930 αἰσχύνεις πόλιν τὴν αὐτὸς αὐτοῦ (= σεαυτοῦ). Kühner-Gerth, i. 564-565 quotes only examples of the idiom where the nom. αὐτὸς occurs too, as in the above citations from Sophocles. Perhaps αὐτῆ παρ' αὐτῆι was the original reading here: ΑΥΤΗ could easily be corrupted to ΑΙΤΩ.

V. 6. Ἐτεόκλες : perhaps read Ἐτεοκλῆς, nom. for voc. as often (form -κλῆς Eur. Ph. 443, 1407); less probably, Ἐτεόκλεες.

V. 7. πάντοτ' : perhaps πᾶν τότ'; but πάντοτ', familiar from Menander, Philemon, could hardly be denied to a Tragedian of the 4th century.

V. 9. παρὰ | βροτοῖς : the rhythm is rare, but cf. Ion 931, Ba. 940, I.A. 1164, Eur. Inc. Fab. 953, Theodectes fr. 8, 5, Ph. 538 is similar.

V. 10. σὺ γὰρ οὐκ : anapaest in first foot as in vv. 13, xviii. dactyl vv. 6 (proper name), 14, 28; tribrach vv. 8 (proper name), 24. Resolutions elsewhere not specially frequent : 2 tribrachs in 2nd, 2 in 4th foot; 2 dactyls in 3rd. This is rather a heavy allowance for the first foot; cf. however Ph. 529 sqq., eleven resolved first feet in 56 lines (one proper name); I.A. 431-437, 507-509, 1199-1201.

στρατοῦς : plural not elsewhere in Tragedy; Iliad xviii. 509, of two armies.

V. 11. I suggest a lacuna here, as ed. pr. did at v. 15. The writer is evidently not copying the passage consecutively, but only certain portions of it. I do not see how v. 11 can be interpreted to follow v. 10 : and vv. 12-13 sqq. make it clear enough that Eteocles has argued meantime, "You have brought an army to attack your own country."

V. 13. φέρειν : here and v. 15 = "fetch," "bring."

ANONYMOUS

V. 14. The rhythm εἰ γὰρ ἐμέριζες at the beginning of the line is unusual, but has parallels in Eur. Or. 2 οὐδὲ πάθος οὐδέ, Ba. 285 ὥστε διὰ τοῦτον. The phrase μερίζειν τὸ διάδημα is remarkable; but μερίζειν is common in historians and philosophers of the 4th century (it means of course "divide," not "share"). And διάδημα, the emblem of royalty for the Great King and for Alexander, is not an improbable flight of fancy for a Tragedian of the 4th century. The word could be used by any poet after Xenophon at latest; and the combination μερίζειν τὸ διάδημα is very passable poetry for "divide the supreme authority." There are stranger things in our scanty fragments of 4th-century Tragedy.

V. 15. ἀνάγκη τοῦ φέρειν: I have not found a parallel to the construction; but the analogy of other words (e.g. αἰτία τοῦ c. infin.) explains it easily.

V. 16. κελεύε μοι: see Kühner-Gerth, i. pp. 410-411. Normal in Homer; but dative not elsewhere in Tragedy. Cf. however Cycl. 83 προσπόλοις κελεύσατε (usually emended), and, for a clear example in the 4th century, Menander, Perik. 224 τί δ' ἐστὶν ὃ κελεύεις ἐμοί; (The dative may be merely "ethic," as Prof. Warmington suggests.) Π gives this line to Eteocles—(change of speaker is denoted by ἐκθεσις of the first line of each new speech)—but the next line suggests that it should be said by the speaker of this one.

V. 19. πρῶιον: word not in Aesch. or Soph. (who has πραύνειν). In Eur. Ba. 436 only.

ἐνετράπη: for the scansion (lengthening of syllabic augment before mute and liquid) see A. Pers. 395, Agam. 536, Eur. Held. 646, H. 150, Hel. 1188, Or. 12; Porson on Or. 64, Tucker in C.R. xi. 1897, 341 (Ph. 586 ἀπότροποι).

V. 28. ἄθελκτον: word not in Eur. or Soph.; Aesch. only Hic. 1055.

The conclusion is:—though there are several points which forbid us to call this a fragment of 5th-century Tragedy,

LITERARY PAPYRI

SPEECH OF A HEROINE [160 B.C.]

*of Pamphile to the πῆρος of Smicrines in Menander, Epitr. ; cf. Jensen, Rh. Mus. 76, 1927, 10 ; this suggestion contested by Körte, Hermes, 61, 1926, 134, who however supported the attribution to New Comedy ; cf. Robertson, Hermes, ibid. 348 ; Körte, ibid. 350 ; Platnauer, New Chapters, iii. 155 and 168 ; the fragment appears in Nauck, T.G.F.², p. 666 as Eur. Incert. Fab. fr. 953 ; in Jensen, Menandri reliqu. p. 132 (praef. xxvi) ; Körte, Menander, 3rd ed. 1938, praef. lxi, text p. 143.

The papyrus belonged to the Macedonian Ptolemaeus, the famous recluse of the Serapeum at Memphis. Wilcken (Urk. d. Ptolemäerzeit, 111, 115) observed that the text on the verso (v. 1, note) was written by Ptolemaeus himself, and the subscriptio to the text on the recto by his brother Apollonius, who was then only 13 or 14 years old.

There can be no doubt that the attribution to Euripides, or to any Tragedian of the 5th century, is mistaken. The elision of -αι in v. 44, the phrases μέχρι πόσου v. 32, τυχὸν ἴσως v. 9, the perfects ἠδίκηκε, ἠμάρτηκε, ἠπόρηκε, and the rhythms (possible but very rare) τῶι μὲν διὰ τέλους v. 15, τῶν μὲν ἀγαθῶν v. 25, are sufficient proof, even if ἀντεῖπαμι is "corrected," and a few other things tolerated.

But the assignment to New Comedy is by no means free from objection. The plain fact is that there is no extant speech in New Comedy, comparable in length, which combines comparatively Tragic metre with comparatively Tragic diction and spirit to the extent which we discover in our fragment. Damoxenus fr. 2 Kock (C.A.F. iii. p. 349), which has been quoted as a parallel, is fairly regular in metre; but openly comic in spirit, style and language. Menander, Perik. 338 sqq. is a good imitation—half parody, half serious imitation—of Tragic metre and style; but since it is a passage of stichomythia, the parallel is wholly inadequate; and the style seems to me not nearly so consistently on the Tragic level as it is in our fragment. In fact, our fragment reads (to my ear) even less like Menander than like Euripides. I am therefore bound to seek some other context for it, until someone can shew me a comparable passage from New Comedy.

Now it is by no means impossible that this fragment proceeds from a Tragedy written in the 4th century B.C., or even later. As for the metre:—(1) The elision of -αι has 4th-century parallels in Pseudo-Eur. I.A. 407; cf. Agathon fr. 29 (=Sthenelus fr. 1); Eur. Incert. Fab. fr. 1080. (2) The unusual rhythm of v. 15 τῶι μὲν διὰ | τέλους has parallels in Eur. Ion 931, Ba. 940, I.A. 1164, Theodectes fr. 8, 5, Anonymous, no. 29, v. 17, v. 9, Anonymous, no. 33, v. 9. (3) The unusual rhythm in v. 25 has a parallel in Pseudo-

ANONYMOUS

Eur. I.A. 1409 ἐξελογίσω. (4) Porson's canon is violated in v. 10: but there are several such violations even in 5th-century Tragedy, Aes. Pers. 321, Soph. Ai. 1101, Phil. 22, Eur. Held. 529, Ion 1, Tro. 1182, Pseudo-Eur. I.A. 635, cf. Descroix, Le trimètre iambique, pp. 300 sqq. As for the language and grammar:—καίτοι γε has a parallel in Eur. I.T. 720, cf. Denniston, Gk. Particles, p. 564. And the other forms and phrases which have given offence are all admitted in prose or poetry of the 4th century (see Kōrte, loc. cit., for details). In the present state of our ignorance we cannot dogmatize about what was and what was not possible for a Tragedian writing in the age of Menander or soon afterwards. μέχρι πόσου is not the diction of 5th-century Tragedy, but I know no reason to deny it to Tragedy in the late 4th century. (As for the "non-Tragic" word μέχρι, μέχρις in Soph. Ai. 571 has never been properly explained.) ἀρμόττει, ἀντίπαιμι are not the forms of 5th-century Tragedy: but neither is out of place in good prose and poetry of the late 4th century. No objection can be brought against the construction of ἀρμόττει v. 2-3 (cf. Soph. Tr. 731) or against that of λοιπόν ἐστι v. 4 (Plato, Resp. 466 D, Xen. Symp. iv. I). οὐσία means "property," as here (v. 30), in Eur. H. 337, Hel. 1253. For the rest, we have only to consider (1) the phrase τυχὸν ἴσως v. 9, (2) the meaning of ἠπόρηκε v. 19—ἀπορῶ does not mean "am poor" in poetry before the 4th century. Kōrte has shewn how well these things were established in the New Comedy. Could they have been used in a Tragedy written during or soon after the lifetime of Menander? We do not know; but have not sufficient reason to suppose the contrary. N.B. too that small changes in this ill-written papyrus would remove several of the divergences from the style of earlier Tragedy—v. 2 ἀρμόζει for ἀρμόττει (Weil); v. 10 ἀντίποιμι for ἀντίπαιμι (Weil); v. 9 τυγχάνουσ' for τυχὸν ἴσως (Nikitin), with ταῦτ' οὐκ (Πα) for οὐσ' οὐκ in v. 10; v. 19 εὐπόρηκε δ' οὐ for ἠπόρηκε δέ (D. L. P.). Such changes

LITERARY PAPYRI

(though I do not recommend them) would leave little in the language, as there is nothing in the metre, which could not find a parallel in Tragedy of the 5th and 4th centuries. We should only have to suppose further that such a phrase as μέχρι πόσου was—as well it may have been—as characteristic of Tragedy in the late 4th or early 3rd century as are the perfect tenses εὐπόρηκεν, ἡμάρτηκεν, ἠδίκηκεν.

In conclusion : there will, I hope, be some who agree with me that the comparative regularity of these lines in their tragic metre and language, combined with the serious and earnest tone, the impassioned and elevated spirit which inform them, precludes the possibility of their ascription to a New Comedy : whereas there is nothing which precludes the likelihood of their ascription to a Tragedy written in the 4th century B.C., or soon afterwards.

Another possibility is this : that the passage is not part of a complete Tragedy, but is an isolated speech written—as an exercise, or for pleasure—in deliberate imitation of Euripides ὦ πάτερ, ἐχρῆν μὲν οὖς ἐγὼ λόγους λέγω, τούτους λέγειν σέ· καὶ γὰρ ἀρμόττει φρονεῖν

by a would-be poet of the late 4th or early 3rd century. In favour of this theory are the facts (1) that—if the few stylistic lapses are overlooked—the spirit and style of the piece are really remarkably Euripidean, (2) that “Euripides” is written at the head (and foot) of the piece,—the natural title to a passage written in imitation of Euripides. But it is hard to think of a good reason why such a tour-de-force should have been included in the same “anthology” as fragments from Aeschylus, Poseidippus, Euripides himself. Mr. Roberts justly observes that the plot of the play (as deduced especially from vv. 20-21), is consistent rather with New Comedy than with Tragedy: but it remains clear that the treatment of the plot was Tragic. This fine speech hovers alone in a by no means lucid interspace of world and world. We do not even know whether 4th century Tragedians dealt occasionally with more or less Menandrian themes.

THE words I speak, father, you should be speaking: it is fitting that you should be wiser than I, and speak what the time demands. Now, in your default, it remains for me, I think, perforce to plead myself the cause of justice. If my husband has done me a great injury, is it not for me to exact a penalty therefor? And if he has wronged me, must I not perceive it? Perhaps I am a fool and know it not.—I will not answer no: and yet a woman, father, though a fool in judgement of all else, may perhaps have good sense about her own affairs. But be it as you will. Where in the world is all that money, father, which—if I have it—will cheer me more than the man I love? How is it just or honourable, that I should take my share of the good things he had, but in his poverty take no share at all? Say, if the man who is now about to take me (which dear God forbid, nor shall it ever be!—at least not of my will, nor while I can prevent it)—if he should lose his substance hereafter, will you give me to another man? And then to another, if he too loses all? How long will you use my life, father, for your experiments with fortune? When I was a child, that was the time for you to find a husband to give me to, for then the choice was yours. But when you had once given me, father, at once it was for me to look to my own fate. And justly so, for if I judge not well, it is my own life that I shall injure. There is the truth. So by the Goddess of our Home, do not rob me of the man to whom you wedded me. This favour I ask you—a just one, father, and full of lovingkindness. If you refuse, you shall do your

Probably ODYSSEUS THE DESERTER [1 B.C.]

The play probably told of Odysseus's entry into Troy, disguised as a beggar in order to obtain information from the enemy. This object he may have attained with the assistance of Helen (cf. Homer, Od. iv. 240-264). If our fragment is part of this play, as appears most probable, it is clear that Odysseus played a comic and by no means heroic rôle. Sent to Troy as a spy, he determined to pretend that he had fulfilled his commission, and to give a picturesque narrative of what he professed to have seen and done. In these lines he is rehearsing that narrative to himself. The sequel is altogether uncertain.

ODYSSEUS. I will retire and sit down here, and consider how my story may seem true even to the sharper wits among them.

(He rehearses his speech.) "It is, I deem, entirely right and proper that you should give thanks to Heaven, if you will only consider how—by going where you told me—I was obliged to sacrifice the comforts of your camp to misery, to fulfil a dangerous task, to win immortal glory by going to the foemen's city; and having learnt all his secrets in full and clearly, report them home to the noble Greeks and my friend the son of Atreus, and myself return unscathed. . . ."

From the beginning of the play. The Chorus enters and, in conversation with an interlocutor, speaks in anapaests of its anxiety about its success. The suggestion is that the judges may be too disturbed by events (doubtless of a grave political nature) to perform their duty patiently. The Chorus consists of a plurality of Plutus: these are the δαίμονες πλουτοδόται of Hesiod (Op. 121 sqq.), once ruled on earth by Cronus, now living in the underworld but sending prosperity to men. They return in this play to Athens and judge the wealthy, whether their fortunes have been amassed unjustly. (So in fr. 208. 2 K. (the Seriphians) Cratinus turns against the νεοπλουτοπόνηροι at Athens.) The first case to be called is that of Hagnon, son of Nicias, from the deme Stiria. One speaker maintains that his family has long been wealthy another avers that Nicias was a porter in the service of Pithias, and (presumably) left nothing to his son.

The politician Hagnon is a well-known character in Athenian history from the Samian Revolt of 440–439 (Thuc. i. 117) down to 413, when he became one of the Πρόβουλοι (Lys. xii. 65). In 437–436 he was prominent in the expedition to settle Amphipolis (Thuc. iv. 102); in 430 he fell foul of Pericles (Plut. Pericles 32). His adventures at Amphipolis may, as Mazon suggests, have laid the foundation of his wealth. And since his feud with Pericles, whom Cratinus hated, would probably have earned him immunity from this poet's attacks, the date of the play is probably to be fixed between 437 and 430 B.C.—very likely the year was 430, when Cratinus might well have been anxious lest the war with Sparta should distract the mind of his judges from their duty.

It is clear that in the Agon of this play (vv. 25 sqq.), the Chorus was a principal actor; no parallel to this can be found in Aristophanes.

^a So Goossens (κλωγμὸν πολὺν is taken in apposition to the action of κατέπινε παῖδα : κλωγμός = "bruit de déglutition") : αἰνετὸς ὑμῖν may allude to a successful scene in a recent comedy (ἀκόνας is taken in apposition to ὑμῖν, "vous qui êtes des pierres à aiguiser (le talent des poètes)"): this seems to me hardly possible, and I have not translated the word) : φωνήντα = "vivant," cf. Hes. Theog. 584. This is perhaps the best of a bad job.

18 στέρεται Beazley, who adds that the point of these lines is : Zeus expelled Cronus and imprisoned the Titans ; Δῆμος, the Populace, has now expelled Zeus, and the Titans have been liberated ; they hasten at once to their old brother Titan, who is Prometheus. Cf. Aesch. Prom. Unbound, fr. 190-192 N., where also a chorus of Titans has come to address Prometheus in an anapaestic parodus.

argument, that this fragment is written in the same handwriting as the rest, carries little or no weight; but it must be conceded that the references to the profanation of the Mysteries are out of place in any but an Old Comedy. Further, the address to the spectators in v. 99 strongly supports the ascription to an Old Comedy. That this Old Comedy was Eupolis's Demoi can then hardly be doubted: its content is entirely suitable, as Körte first demonstrated.

This famous play was divided (by the Parabasis) into two different but essentially connected halves. (1) In all that part which preceded the Parabasis, the scene was set in the underworld. The Chorus consisted of the old Demes, the principal actors were the great old heroes of Athens—Solon, Pisistratus, Miltiades, Aristides, Pericles and others. The plot was the δοκιμασία, or examination, of these heroes: the present state of Athens—her distress in the dark days which followed the end of the Sicilian expedition—has been reported by the last of the great generals, Myronides, who has recently died: it is determined that an embassy shall be sent from the underworld to Athens, and the action concerns the choice of the ambassadors. Arguments were brought forward for and against many of the great men of old. Aristides gave evidence against Themistocles, Miltiades spoke in favour of Pericles. In the end, five—the normal number of an Athenian embassy—were chosen: Solon, Miltiades, Aristides, Pericles and Myronides. [Aristides ii. 300. 11, iii. 672 Schol., says that Eupolis resurrected only four προστάται. The exclusion of Myronides is natural; he was not technically a προστάτης at Athens, and he acts less as an ambassador than as a ψυχαγωγός, conductor of the others, being the only one who is but recently dead; see Keil, pp. 241-242.] (2) In all that part which followed the Parabasis, the scene was set in the Ἀγορά at Athens. The Chorus consisted of the present-day Demes,^a the principal actors were the five ambassadors who have now risen from Hades. The plot was probably unfolded in a succession of scenes such as we read in vv. 62-100. The famous old heroes of Athens deal after their own manner with living offenders, their degenerate counterparts in the city to-day. Aristides makes short work of a sycophant; no doubt Solon dealt with a moral offender, Miltiades with an inefficient general, Pericles with a corrupt politician.

In our fragments: Vv. 1-32 are from the Parabasis of the play. The Chorus gives "a little list | of persons in society who never would be missed." The general ground for inflicting on them whatever form of maltreatment is denoted by διαστρέφειν,^b is apparently the fact that they have plenty to eat, while the Chorus is starving. The dwellers in the city and the Long Walls have apparently the first pick at such supplies as come in, and the countryfolk receive only what they can glean, ὀλίγον τε φίλον τε. Special animosity is shewn towards the Long Wall residents, who are ex-country-folk.

^a A striking change of dress probably accompanied this change of identity, see Keil, 248 sqq.

^b On the meaning of this word, very obscure in this place, see esp. Körte, Ber. Sächs. Akad. pp. 25-28 and literature quoted, p. 26.

Vv. 21-35. In the Epirrhema, some politician is attacked. His identity is beyond conjecture. He appears to be some sort of alien (22); the Attic dialect does not come naturally to him (23); he keeps low company; he is a critic of the High Command, and seems to have been in some measure responsible for the expedition against Mantinea, persuading the city to take part in that enterprise although the omens were bad and the High Command adverse. (But the passage is obscure; see notes ad loc.)

Vv. 33-60. After the Parabasis, Athenian statesmen of former days emerge from the Underworld. They are met by a Proboulos, one of the Ten Supreme Commissioners of Athens. Aristides' first request is for a meal: the Proboulos is obliging, but warns the Old Statesmen that things are not what they were, and they must not expect much to eat (again this central theme—the starvation of Athens). The Statesmen sit down, all but Myronides, whom the Proboulos and Chorus address in terms of warm friendliness and respect.

Vv. 61-100. A Sycophant comes to Aristides for justice. His story is: He saw an Epidaurian in the street with barley-crumbs sticking to his beard. That suggested that he had been sacrilegiously drinking the Sacred Soup of the Eleusinian Mysteries. The Sycophant blackmailed him for a large sum. What happened next is obscure. But it seems clear enough that the Sycophant subsequently suffered some ill treatment at the hands of the Epidaurian, and appealed to Aristides for justice. But Aristides declined to take his part. Indeed he dealt with him severely; and warned the city that Justice was their most important virtue.

I follow Goossens in distinguishing three speakers in this fragment. The speaker of 19-20 is clearly the obstinate αὐτός of v. 9, τοῦτον v. 12. The speakers of v. 10 (N.B. plurals, vv. 4, 10) are clearly to be distinguished both from the obstinate person and from the speaker of vv. 4-9, 11-17. The fragment now yields the following information:—B fails to persuade A, and therefore turns to C and urges him (or rather them) to do some task. The nature of the task is concealed in vv. 5-7, which can be understood in more than one way: C is either to tell someone how things are here with the Prospaltians, or to tell the Prospaltians how things are here. Even this does not exhaust the possibilities. (Πρόσπαλτα was the name of a deme in the Φυλὴ Ἀκαμαντίς, in the south of Athens, near the city walls.) The purport of the message, whether it be to the Prospaltians or to others on behalf of the Prospaltians, is put in the form of an alternative:—either an army is to be sent, or some persons are to be removed somewhither. Thus they (probably the Pros-paltians) would be unable to complain of inaction and wasteful expense or loss.

Since A is obdurate in his refusal, C is requested to undertake the mission. C accedes, and avers that they must first consider how much (money?) is to be sent to B. B attempts once more to persuade A, adding force to his argument with a parody of Sophocles' Antigone 712-714. But A persists in his refusal.

This is an obscure enough action: and many will think that our fragment permits no conjecture at once safe and illuminating about the matter of its context. The most that can be said is that this was a political comedy, its subject taken from contemporary events. With this view I agree: but am bound to mention the brilliant—and extremely daring—hypothesis which Goossens put forward in Rev. de Phil. loc. cit. In brief (and space forbids me to do him justice):—the allusion in v. 7 is to the withdrawal of Attic villagers and countryfolk to Athens at the start of the Archidamian War, 431 B.C. The Prospaltians must either send an army^a or evacuate their dwellings and retire within the walls. The obstinate man, who will not act in this matter of army or evacuation, is none other than Pericles. B is the spokesman of the opposition to Pericles' war-policy; representative of the view that the Athenians should go forth and meet the Spartans in open battle, instead of watching them destroy Attic farms and villages unopposed. This theory is illustrated and supported by a number of minute and ingenious arguments which shew that the theory is possible, though they do not shew that it is true. Goossens further accepts the suggestion (of ed. pr.) that this is a fragment of Eupolis's Prospaltians. He assigns the play to the year 429 B.C. [Normally dated much later, about 420 B.C. : but there is nothing that proves it, v. Goossens, pp. 343-344.] It will then be the first or second of the plays produced by Eupolis ; and its purpose will be to attack Pericles on the ground of his policy at the beginning of the war. For full details I must refer to Rev. de Phil. loc. cit.

I have not reconstructed text and translation on this basis, for there is no certainty in either of the two questions which arise.—(1) What is the evidence that the action of our fragment is concerned with these events ? It is simply this, that it is possible to make the inference from v. 7, and not very difficult to interpret the rest of the lines in the same light. But it is absolutely clear that the inference is not necessary, or indeed even cogent : it is easy enough to take the line in an entirely different way. (2) What is the evidence that this fragment comes from Eupolis's Prospaltians, however we interpret its action ? It is simply the appearance of the word Προσπαλτίοισι in v. 6 : this seems to me to be insufficient evidence. As for the action according to Goossens : we learn from Etym. Magn. 288. 19 that ἐκωμωιδούντο . . . Προσπαλτίοι ὡς δικαστικοί (cf. ὅταν ἤ[ι] που] δ[ικῶν s.v.l., v. 14). If the reference is to the Prospaltians of Eupolis, the statement is not very easy to reconcile with Goossens' theory of the action of the play : he is conscious of the difficulty, and discovers a solution (pp. 344, 347) ; but I find this the least ingenious part of his argument.

(A) Now I . . . where the villains are . . . of good . . . if I were not to do . . .

an army capable of defeating the Spartans, or leave your territory" : since the first alternative is obviously unpracticable for the Prospaltians, the command is virtually "leave your territory."

892 : but it is a commonplace phrase which may well have occurred in a much earlier play too : cf. Eur. Or. 1616. In favour of the ascription to Middle Comedy are the facts : (1) that the subject-matter of our fragment coincides with the plot which we assume to have deserved the title Διὸς γοναί in a play by Philiscus ; (2) that such parody of myths about the gods (especially about such myths as were well-known from Tragedies) was a common feature of the Μέση. That the Middle Comedy was read in Egypt is proved by P. Oxy. no. 427 (end and title of Antiphanes' Ἀνθρωπογονία) : but the case in favour of ascribing our fragment to Middle Comedy in general, or to Philiscus's play in particular, must be admitted to be singularly wanting in evidence.

RHEA. One of you may retort "What have your troubles to do with me?" I reply in the words of Sophocles, "Dreadful my sufferings"—old Cronus is drinking and eating all his children up. He doesn't give me any share in them.^a With his own hands he does it^b—takes all my babies to Megara,^c sells them, and swallows the money. He is running from that them" or "gives me no share in these (foods and drinks)." But it probably means "gives me no share whatever in these (children)." ^b Possibly "does them in": but he seems to sell them alive. ^c Cf. Ar. Ach. 729, a Megarian sells his children.

From a scene before a temple of Demeter. Before the beginning, someone's death has lately been announced. Thereupon a speaker (A) philosophizes; and then expresses his desire to enter the temple. It is not clear whether he does so, or is prevented by the sudden entrance of another person (B), who seeks protection from the assault of a third person (C), who is called a "guardian" (κληρονόμος). C, who is accompanied by a slave Sosias, calls B a "slaver"; and B threatens C with physical violence: calling upon a group of men (D) to witness the fact that he is on holy ground. These men (D) express disapproval of the conduct of either B or C (probably of the former).

Zuntz suggests the following action:—B is a leno (not a slave: see vv. 19-23—in New Comedy, a slave could not so

It has been alleged that this fragment must be part of a pre-Menandrian comedy; for the Chorus here takes an active part in the play, outside its ordinary function in interludes (χορ[οῦ μέλος fr. 2, ed. pr.). [It is not certain that the ἄνδρες of v. 18 are really a Chorus: Zuntz compares the crowd of fishermen in Plautus's Rudens, of advocates in his Poenulus: but it must be confessed that it is much more probable that a Chorus is intended.] Alexis is proposed as the author, on the ground that he is known to have used the form παλαιστρικῶς (v. 23: Attic was παλαιστικῶς): but unless we suppose that he alone used the form (and there is no reason for the supposition) it is impossible to attribute

The Icarians of Timocles has been inferred to be a satyric play, since Athenaeus ix. 407 f entitles it 'Ικάριοι Σάτυροι: but it is highly probable that this was merely the full title of a comedy (Wagner, op. cit.): personal allusions and attacks have no place in a satyric drama.

HEROES, and ICARIANS [2 A.D.]

[In fr. (b) vv. 11-12 there is a direct address to the audience: it is not certain that this could not occur in a satyric drama, cf. Soph. Ichneutae, col. iv. 5, ed. pr.]

About the Heroes nothing is known. It has been conjectured (on very doubtful evidence, v. Wagner and Schroeder, loc. cit.) that it was produced in or about the year 342 B.C.

Evidently these two plays, like the Sculptor of Philemon (above), belong rather to Middle than to New Comedy.

Beazley has solved the mystery of the inner meaning by a reference to Pollux vii. 108 (Ar. fr. 592 Hall): πρὸ δὲ τῶν καμίνων τοῖς χαλκεύσιν ἔθος ἦν γελοῖά τινα καταρτᾶν ἢ ἐπιπλάττειν ἐπὶ φθόνου ἀποτροπῆι· ἐκαλεῖτο δὲ βασκάνια, ὡς καὶ Ἀριστοφάνης λέγει· πλὴν εἴ τις πρίατο, δεόμενος | βασκάνιον ἐπὶ κάμινον ἀνδρὸς χαλκέως. Cf. further Pernice, Festschrift für Benndorf, p. 75. The point then is that Autocles is good for nothing but to be a dummy or mascot, such as you commonly saw erected on the furnace in a foundry.

Oxy.* nos. 1013, 1605, perhaps 1238.

The attribution of this fragment to Menander's Μισούμενος is practically certain (see Körte, loc. cit.).

A soldier Thrasonides is in love with Crateia, his captive. Though his passion is extreme, his conduct towards her is irreproachable: yet she will have none of him. Her father Demeas arrives, eager to purchase his daughter's freedom:

he lodges next door to Thrasonides. In the first part of our fragment, Getas (servant to Thrasonides) is probably soliloquizing. He and his master suspect Demeas of designs upon Crateia, little knowing that he is her father. Crateia's nurse enters, and recognizes Demeas. Father and daughter now recognize each other; but their happiness is rudely disturbed by the entry of jealous Thrasonides. The conclusion is not known but can easily be inferred: Thrasonides released Crateia, who rewarded his persevering and unselfish devotion with her consent to marriage. The play was very similar in plot and in characters to the same author's Perikeiromene.

GETAS. . . . you come to us. But what's the matter with you?—giving me . . . and dodging and doubling back? If you are not doing us down, why

Possibly THE CHANGELING [160 B.C.]

Herzog's commentary, loc. cit.): the attribution to his Hypobolimaheus (tentatively proposed ibid.) is a mere guess.

The lines are evidently from the beginning of a play: a young man has come to town from the country; studies in philosophy have opened his eyes and stimulated his imagination. He will probably find in the course of the action that his philosophy will not help him in intrigue, or protect him from distress.

WELL, here is solitude; whatever I say, there's nobody here to listen. Gentlemen,^a believe me: I have been dead the whole of my life so far. There seemed no difference between the beautiful, the good, the holy, and the evil,—such was the cloud of darkness that used to hang about my wits, I fancy. It hid all this from me, made it invisible.

Now that I have come here, I have come to life again for the future, like a man who lies down in Asclepius's temple and is saved; I walk and talk and think. I never discovered the sun before—so big, so fine! On this bright morning for the first time I see yourselves, the daylight, the acropolis, the theatre . . .

* Evidently he is rehearsing a speech for some occasion: otherwise this address to the "Gentlemen" would appear inconsistent with the "solitude" to which the previous lines refer.

At the foot of the piece is written αριστων φιλοσοφος μαθηματα: for which see Herzog, loc. cit., Körte, praef. lxiii.

The Prologue (doubtless preceded by an earlier scene, see Vitelli, p. 29, Körte, Archiv, 148, Menander lvii.) is spoken by Fortune. Her story is this:—An old miser Smicrines lives alone with one old woman-servant. His younger brother Chaereas lives next door (the houses of the brothers form the background of the scene). Chaereas is wealthy and popular, and has a wife and daughter. Now a certain young man (hereinafter A) went abroad and left his sister in the

^a Ulbricht, p. 20, n. 37, thinks ("satis audacter," as Körte says) that the marriage to which Sm. objects is one between A and the daughter of Chaereas. See next note.
^b Herzog thinks that A is the son of Smicrines: that he has returned from his journey, and wishes—against his care of Chaereas, his relative. Chaereas, observing that A's property has greatly deteriorated in his absence, determines to repair A's fortunes by giving the sister in marriage to his own stepson. When this prologue is done, Smicrines appears and defends himself against the charge of avarice: he refers to gold and silver possessions, but it is wholly uncertain what part these played in the sequel: he announces his intention to prevent the impending marriage.^a The rest of the first act and the greatest part of the second are lost in the following lacuna of about 220 lines: in the next fragment, Daos (a slave) conspires with one or two persons (one of them surely Chaereas) to deceive and outwit Smicrines. The essence of the stratagem is to be the fictitious death of Chaereas. The purpose of this stratagem is a matter for (or rather beyond) conjecture.^b In the third act, Daos gradually reveals to Smicrines the supposed death of his brother Chaereas: he quotes Aeschylus and Carcinus to prepare him for the heavy blow, Euripides to soothe him afterwards.

(From the Prologue)

FORTUNE. . . . to have everything, as he knows. . . . He lives all alone with one old maid-servant. Now, in the neighbour's house, where that attendant went in just now, lives this miser's younger brother. He is related to our young friend, a thoroughly decent father's will—to marry the daughter of Chaereas. The fictitious death of Ch. is designed so that his daughter may pass into the power of his nearest kinsman, viz. Smicrines: this will perhaps assist A in his intention to marry her. This view seems to me completely refuted by Wilamowitz, loc. cit., Körte, Menander, praef. lix.

? ΘΕΟΦΟΡΟΥΜΕΝΗ

Ed. pr. *Vitelli-Norsa, Annali della reale Scuola normale superiore di Pisa, Serie ii. 4, 1935, p. 1. See Körte, Hermes, 70, 1935, 431, Archiv, xiii. 1938, 102 and Menander, reliquiae, 3rd ed. 1938, praef. xlv, text 101; Lesky, Hermes, 72, 1937, 123.

*Menander's Θεοφορουμένη has been suggested as the source of the fragment: though the word ἰππόπορνε v. 4 is an obstacle to the attribution. Such words were studiously avoided by Menander (and indeed by New Comedy in general: cf. however ἐβίγησα, p. 282, below; σκατοφάγος Men. Perik. 204, Sa. 205, is a different type of word). Vitelli observes that the word ἰππόπορνος is found thrice in Alciphron, whose frequent dependence upon Menander is undoubted: but this affords no legitimate inference here. The case in favour of the ascription is this:—(1) The form παράστα v. 13, attested for Menander (see Körte, Hermes, p. 432) and for him alone. (2) The rare word θεοφορεῖται v. 10, and the apparent presence of a divinely-possessed girl on the stage. On this evidence we must concede that there is some, perhaps a strong, probability that our fragment is part of Menander's Theophoroumene: we shall not use such phrases as "endgültig gesichert" (Lesky, p. 124).*

The content of the opening lines is impossible to elucidate with certainty. Körte thinks that the first line and half the second are spoken by the divinely-possessed girl (Theophoroumene): the next four and a half lines by Craton, alleged to be a father who disapproves of his son's intrigue with the girl. Craton and his friend Lysias are present unseen by the girl, whose speech they overhear and misinterpret. E.g. the girl says ἔπ[τα]σα τὰμὰ δῶρα meaning "I have stumbled because of my gifts," i.e. her gift of divine inspiration : Craton thinks she means concrete literal gifts, mistakenly. Then τίς ἔλαβέ σε is misunderstood—she had used the word ἐλήφθην in some different sense above. I hope that my profound disagreement with this interpretation will not be thought inconsistent with my respect for the interpreter : but (1) there is no indication in Π of a change of speaker after δῶρα in v. 2 ; yet such a change is essential to K.'s theory : (2) ἔλαβε(s) is not a misunderstanding of anything : coming between the words δῶρα and δόντα, it is part of their context and means simply "received" (the gifts) : (3) in K.'s view, μαίνει vv. 7 and 8 must be said by Lysias to Craton ; yet in fact, since there is an apparently demented woman on the scene, the words should obviously be addressed to her, not to the irate father by his companion : (4) ἔπταισα τὰμὰ δῶρα could not bear the meaning which K. gives it : the plain accusative is unparalleled (ἐὰν πταίωσι τι and similar phrases are of course not relevant parallels) : (5) there are sundry difficulties of detail.—τὸ δὲ v. 3 is untranslatable in K.'s text : the sense given by K. to ἔλαβε is only dubiously possible : τοῦτό γ' αὐτό v. 8 should = τὸ μαίνεσθαι, referring directly to the charge μαίνει vv. 7, 8 ; it cannot do so in K.'s view : the connexion of v. 7 τί οὖν οὐκ κτλ. is a little obscure (given to Craton in K.'s text). At least it will be admitted that Körte's view presents serious difficulties ; that in several places (esp. in the case of the words ἔλαβε(s) and μαίνει) it ignores the most obvious interpretation of the lines ; and that it is, at best, only one among other possibilities.

My own reconstruction is by no means free from difficulties. We must, I think, suppose that the Theophoroumene does not overhear the proposal of a test (vv. 9-10) : perhaps, if she is apparently mad and tearing in confusion to and fro across the scene, this difficulty is not very great. Further, I need hardly say that I am dissatisfied with the sense which I give to v. 7 τί οὖν οὐκ ἔνδον ἐγκεκλειμένη^a; and with the change—slight as it is—from τι[ς] to π[ως] in v. 4 : but I do not understand either Vitelli's τὸ δὲ | τίς ἔλαβες or Körte's τὸ δὲ | τίς ἔλαβέ σ'.—in both, the sense of τὸ δὲ (and of ἔλαβες, ἔλαβε) is immensely obscure. I print my own text in the faint hope that it will prompt the reader to something better.

I suppose that the divinely-possessed maiden is reporting—in wildest excitement and distress—an accusation of theft brought against her: a young man is alleged to have been her accomplice. Lysias (whose name has no precedent in Comedy) proposes to his companion a test to determine whether the girl is feigning madness or not. It is clear that without further evidence the antecedents and sequel of these lines cannot fairly be conjectured. (It is possible that the girl is addressing her report to Lysias, and that A is the robbed man who has brought the accusation against her.)

GIRL. . . . shedding (tears) from their eyes, . . .
 "My presents!—do you hear, young woman?"—he says, "they took my presents away from me! How did you get this,^b strumpet? How did you come to know this fellow who gave them to you? What is the lad . . ., and why are you strolling the streets with a wreath?"

LYSIAS. You're mad!

GIRL. Then why am I not shut up?

LYSIAS. You're mad!

(A) Nonsense!—Surely it's just this madness that she is assuming, Lysias?

LYSIAS. We can take a test, to see if she has demons in her. For here and now in very truth a choir of the Mother of the Gods comes bounding forward, or

* Perhaps this sentence is part of the girl's reported speech, recapitulating τί . . . ἔξω περιπατεῖς after the interruption μαίνει. If so, there is no reason to suppose that she is addressing Lysias and his companion, or even aware of their presence. This may be the simpler and preferable view. ^b One of the stolen gifts.

PHOENICIDES

[Late 3 B.C.]

The first 47 lines of this fragment were already known from Athenaeus ix. 382 c, where they are assigned to the Φοινικίδες of Straton (= Com. Att. Fragm. iii. p. 361 Kock). Little more is known of this poet. Athenaeus xiv. 659 b attributes the first four lines of the same piece to Philemon : Eustathius quotes v. 34 as the work of τῶν τριῶν παλαιῶν : Suidas ascribes to Straton a Φοῖνιξ (doubtless the same play as Athenaeus's Φοινικίδες) and assigns him to the Middle Comedy, erroneously.

Of the 47 verses quoted by Athenaeus, our papyrus contains (in whole or in part) only 28, adding at the end three lines hitherto unknown to us. Of the missing lines, three (the first three of the piece) were certainly written in the papyrus, now lost in the mutilation of its beginning. Vv. 9-10, 12, 16 and 22 of Athenaeus's text were definitely unknown to, or for some reason omitted by, the writer of the papyrus. Vv. 26-37 of Athenaeus's text are missing from the papyrus in a lacuna which, it appears, is not large enough to have included more than four or five of those twelve lines.

Further : in the lines which both texts have in common, there are many wide divergencies in reading.

The first editors are clearly correct in their view that the additional lines in Athenaeus are all, or nearly all, interpolations deliberately inserted to "improve" the piece. That the omissions in Π are not accidental, is proved by the fact that they nowhere spoil, much less destroy, the sense of their contexts. There seems to be no reason why the copyist of Π should have omitted the lines voluntarily; and the remaining view, that the lines are not omissions from Π but additions made later to Π's original, is supported by the fact that in each case a clear motive for interpolation is visible. In general their motive is, as the first editors observed, to stress and emphasize a point or joke, so as to make it clearer to the spectator (or reader). Thus v. 16 is virtually nothing more than a repetition of v. 11; v. 12 a repetition of v. 15; v. 22 was evidently added to make a clearer connexion; vv. 9-10 to expand the joke about μέρορες (v. 10 is intelligible only in light of the double meaning of μέρορες = (a) "mortals," (b) a sort of bird : here such an ambiguity goes clearly beyond the original purpose of the passage—the use of obscure Homeric words in place of their colloquial equivalents).

It is important to observe further that the inserting of an interpolation leads to changes in the reading of the context. Such changes may be either accidental, as in v. 14, where the false reading ἀνελογιζόμεν was caused simply by a lapse in memory or attention under the influence of the preceding ἐλογιζόμεν in the interpolated v. 12 ; or deliberate, as in v. 17 where the interpolation of v. 16 makes the reading ὁ δ' impossible—it is therefore changed to σφόδρ', and this in turn necessitates the substitution of πάνυ for σφόδρα in v. 18. Just so the interpolation of οὐκοῦν ἔφη in v. 22 led to the deliberate change of οὐκ οἶδ' ἔφη at the end of the next line to οὐ μανθάνω.

These characteristics of interpolation were already obvious to us in our Greek Tragedies. The motive is especially common—the desire to emphasize, or to explain, a point in the original which, in a later age, might not be sufficiently, or indeed at all, appreciated. (Cf. Schol. Soph. Ai. 839-842 τὼς αὐτοσφαγεῖς ταῦτα νοθεύεσθαι φασιν ὑποβληθέντα πρὸς σαφήνειαν τῶν λεγομένων: my Actors' Interpolations, pp. 76, 117, etc.) And the fact that interpolation might lead to consequent changes in the surrounding context was already observed in a number of tragic passages.

It cannot of course be proved that the interpolations in Straton were made by actors: but the analogy of Tragedy makes it probable.

As for the variations in those lines which both texts present to us: most of them are examples of that substitution of more or less synonymous or similar words and phrases which is so peculiarly common in Tragedy and indeed generally in dramatic texts, and which is most easily explained by reference to a fault of the actor's memory: no two actors reciting 500 lines of Euripides or Shakespeare will use exactly the same words throughout: in Eur. Hec. 44 one would say

The subject of the play was probably an affair of love between the cousins mentioned in v. 19.

Now I want you to be compelled to understand everything : and I, for my part, want to produce a play that does honour to your god—I really mean it, your god. For I am Dionysus ; the story which you must believe is something of this sort :—

Once upon a time there were two brothers, Sosthenes and Demeas. They married into neighbouring families. One of them had a son, the other a daughter. Then they both went abroad at the same time to Asia, where they were in danger of losing their lives—one of them was put in prison, suffering an unjust punishment, and the other brought about his rescue. Thereupon the former escaped unobserved, and the latter was put in chains on the charge of smuggling him out. Thus their absence

61 [1 A.D.] MOSCHION, LACHES

Ed. pr. Vitelli, Studi Italiani di Filologia Classica, vii. 1929, p. 235. Republished with revised text by the same editor in Pap. Greci e Latini*, x. 1932, no. 1176 with Plate. See Körte, Archiv, x. 56, Hermes, 72, 1937, 50; Vogliano, Gnomon, vi. 1930, 113; Platnauer, New Chapters, iii. 174.

It appears probable that these events should be interpreted as follows:—Laches has a son Moschion and a daughter, children of different mothers. He has arranged a marriage between them, and himself has gone abroad for a time. He hears during his absence that Moschion, who loves another girl, refuses to marry the daughter: and he therefore sends an acquaintance (C) to deal with his obstinate son. Laches himself follows hard upon the heels of his messenger; who upbraids him for delegating so unpleasant and difficult a mission. (It is possible that the daughter is the child of C, the messenger, not of Laches.) Vv. 1-20 it appears that Moschion has accomplices, one of whom (a slave of Laches,

The authorship is (as usual) unknown. Menander is not a specially probable candidate: certain phrases, e.g. καιρὸν εὐφυνῆ λαβῶν v. 20, υἱῶι φέροντα περὶ γάμου v. 26, are not in the style of Menander; nor is the lengthy and circumstantial description of a storm at sea.^a Körte (Hermes, loc. cit.) expounds and rejects the grounds in favour of assigning this fragment to the play known as Menander's Fabula Incerta (editions of Jensen, Sudhaus, etc.). In that play, characters named Moschion and Laches are prominent, and the action, so far as it can be discerned, is not irreconcilable with the action of our fragment, so far as it can be discerned. But similarity of names and action in Menander do not prove identity of play: and though the actions of the two pieces are similar, there are sundry discrepancies which are not easy to explain. See Körte, pp. 76-77: the case, as at present expounded, is not strong enough to be worth repeating in detail here.

YOUTH, DAOS, SIMON [2 B.C.]

—as Wilamowitz observed—unlikely that Menander would have used the word ἐβίησα (v. 1, see p. 256).

A young man is about to break off his engagement to the daughter of a notable citizen, being in love with a foreign woman. He is conversing with his slave, who urges him to change his mind. When his master, still obdurate, leaves the scene, the slave determines not to abandon hope but to invent a plot to save his master—and himself—from ruin.

Simon, father of the affianced daughter, enters and prepares the wedding ceremony, which he seems to fear may be interrupted.

YOUNG MAN. Surely you won't say that I seduced the girl!

DAOS. God bless my soul! Tell me, how do you think he's going to bear the facts, and what do you suppose he's going to say afterwards?

YOUNG MAN. Well, what?

DAOS. It's highly probable—to-day, as for some time past—that this will cost him his governorship. Marrying his daughter to a man beneath her class (you, that is!), a bad job—that's what it looked like at the time. Now he may very possibly reply that he was justified in giving his daughter for the sake of old acquaintance, and the agreement at the time; but you have now made other plans. Well and good. And now perhaps some other suitable husband for the girl will come along. Meantime you have received part of the dowry in advance.—Tell me, is there anyone whom you respect?

YOUNG MAN. Only myself.

DAOS. You can be sure that he will mention how often you visited his house. His acquaintances will add that you ought never to have enjoyed his company, and then to have behaved in this underhand manner. He will win the jury over: "You have no respect for your friends!" he will cry, "for tell me, whom do you respect?" And you won't be able to escape the penalty: all the world will be your prosecutor. They will convict you clearly, besieging you . . . in a circle. . . .

DAOS. That's absolutely impossible.

YOUNG MAN. Still I must see it through.

DAOS. Don't you see the situation of your little stranger girl? "There's a very charming little lady—but oh, her sweetheart!" You're completely ruined; not even the gods could save you both now—not one of them!

YOUNG MAN. Oh yes, they will. (Departs.)

DAOS. Well: he's gone off and left me. Now Daos, it's no time to lie down and wonder what to do. Cowardice, I call that. First you must try everything you can; he shall learn that you are no ordinary fellow. This business gives ample opportunity. To get the better of a jolly chorus-girl and cheat an easy-going master—that is a task for a slave bought only yesterday, as I have discovered once or twice before now. But this, I see, requires a great deal of thought. If you're caught, you may have a heavy price to pay. When I've come to the end of this road, I shall have found either compliments or a dressing-down. I have to rescue my master: I will stand fearlessly beside him, however he may act in the matter.

native of the town in which Demeas lives). The young man is reluctant to accept this offer, and is therefore reproached by his slave. The young man praises Demeas warmly. At vv. 23-24 Demeas enters his house; and while the young man is waiting for his return, there emerges from the other house its owner (A), evidently enraged because his wife has taken a baby in. He commands her to send it away, and inquires whither his own daughter has disappeared.

The interpretation of these events is obscure and uncertain. It seems probable that the young man is enamoured of A's daughter, and that the child whom A has discovered in his house and wishes to expel, was borne by his daughter to the young man: who now first learns of the baby's existence. Beyond this all is mere guesswork.

YOUNG MAN. For what's the good of it?—The door creaked—someone is coming out!

DEMEAS (entering). Take away the basket in which you brought the bread here, and give it back to Numenius, who lent it. . . . after you come back. (Observing the Young Man and Slave) Hullo, and what are you talking about?

The argument appears to be :—

(1) A slave Strobilus has been commanded by his young master to make a great effort to obtain for him the company of a young woman. The slave has fulfilled his mission to the best of his ability: he has found her lodging, but not yet conversed with her.

(2) Strobilus reproaches his master for estranging himself from his father through his passion for the young woman.

(3), (4) Strobilus has discovered great abundance of treasure. His master enters, and hears what the slave has found.

(5) Strobilus converses with another slave, Daos, who offers to assist him in some enterprise or difficulty.

Beyond this, nothing can be clearly discerned. Blass maintained that these fragments are the work of Philemon, identifying v. 21 Κροισ[with Philemon fr. 189 K. Κροίσωι λαλῶ σοι καὶ Μίδα καὶ Ταντάλωι. This hazardous speculation, though approved by Hunt (P. Hibeh, p. 25), has naturally found little support. Nor is there any likelihood in the theory that this play was the model of Plautus's Aulularia; so slight is the resemblance between the two.

The word νόμαρχος in v. 7, being the name of an Egyptian magistrate, has led to the plausible inference that this play was written for performance in Egypt. But Schroeder properly criticizes the view that it is the humble work of an obscure poet: were this so, "mirum esset si talis comoediae inter papyros non ita multas duo iam codices innotuissent." See further Gerhard, op. cit. p. 48.

(1) STROBILUS. . . . to look, to approach everyone, to make experiments to see if he can possibly obtain the girl; because he went completely insane when he set eyes on her.

I've done what he told me: I have found where she lives. It was impossible . . . the Governor. . . .

The fragment begins with a soliloquy by a slave, who appears to have been reproached by his mistress. He says that he fears her less than her husband, the master of the house, who has just returned from a journey and knows nothing of recent developments. He will soon find that his daughter is missing from her home.

Phaedimus, a young man in love with the daughter, appears and upbraids the slave as the cause of his misfortunes.

enters the scene ; Phaedimus withdraws to a place of concealment to escape his notice. The master of the house laments the disappearance of his daughter, and enters his home together with the slave. Phaedimus emerges from his retreat, and is greeted by Niceratus ; with whom he quarrels vigorously, alleging that Niceratus had taken from him the girl he wished to marry. Niceratus denies the charge ; and has just persuaded Phaedimus to hear him out, when Chaerestratus (whom Phaedimus had sent on an errand) enters and informs Phaedimus that his charge against Niceratus is unjust. He promises to explain everything, if Niceratus will leave him alone with Phaedimus. Niceratus departs.

LITERARY PAPYRI

It is fairly clear that what really happened was this.—The daughter (who loved and was loved by Phaedimus), fearing for some reason the return of her father,—perhaps he would detect in her appearance the evidence of misconduct—fled from her home. Niceratus thought to render his friend Phaedimus a signal service by harbouring her in his house which was next door, her nearest refuge. But Phaedimus not unnaturally misunderstood his comrade's motives.

There is no evidence to determine the further course of the action.

Language, style and metre oppose the ascription of these lively but inartistic fragments to Menander : especially disturbing are the form αὐτοῖσι in v. 41 ; the rhythm μεῖζον ἀγαθόν at the end of the line 44 ; the peculiar use of σαντόν v. 53. The play was probably the work of a poet who lived some time after Menander ; perhaps a native of Alexandria. V. 15 of our fragments was the 100th line of the play.

SLAVE. I am less afraid of you, mistress, than of her father here. He has just arrived, completely unaware of what has happened, I imagine. Unless something very unexpected occurs, all our plans have come to nothing. Hullo, here's someone coming : I see, he is hurrying toward me. Good day to you, Phaedimus, I was delighted to learn that you're here, and I'm glad you came to me at once.

PHAEDIMUS. Don't come near me, confound you !

SLAVE. Why ever not ?

PHAEDIMUS. You ask me that, and have the nerve to look me in the eyes,—you who have ruined me !

SLAVE. I ruined you ?

PHAED. . . . you saw . . .

SLAVE. Fortune . . . but to the gods.

PHAED. I learnt . . .

FATHER. Who told you to ?

SLAVE. Who, indeed ! Your conduct would have forced me to.

FATHER. Heavens, my daughter, what have you done to me? At last I understand! She is there now, I suppose?

SLAVE. She is.

FATHER. My daughter, what a thing to do! I should never have thought it of you, daughter! What made you do it, my daughter? (Departs.)

PHAED. (emerging from his retreat). Is he going?

NICERATUS (entering, aside). Not meeting Phaedimus anywhere, I came back, and here I am, waiting.

PHAED. (aside). I do hope it wasn't a great mistake to send Chaerestratus to the harbour.^a NIC. Our old friend, large as life!

PHAED. (aside). First the friend, and then the enemy again! I wonder what is the best way to approach him.

NIC. Good day to you, my dear fellow, shake hands, do!

PHAED. (aside). What must I do now? Old acquaintance, friendship, all these years, the fact that he was fond of me, and I could trust him once. . . .

(Eight lines missing)

Your behaviour, loyal comrade, quite overshoots all precedent. Quite a wonderful friend, you are!

NIC. What do you mean?

PHAED. You exercised forethought on my behalf?

Phaed. is the man whom he sent Chaer. to fetch thence. This involves ignoring the paragaphus at v. 22 (Robert's expedient is impossible). And v. Introductory Note: it is most probable that Phaed. sent Chaer. to the harbour to meet and delay the father. It remains obscure, why no reference is made to this mission, whatever it was, at v. 70; and why Phaed. should think that he may have made a mistake in sending Chaer. there. See note on v. 69.

NIC. I should say so.

PHAED. I always did think it took more courage to face your friends after you have injured them, than to be a soldier at the front. In the latter case, each side is equally frightened, and each alike presumes that he is doing something noble. But with the former, I have often wondered how on earth their consciences give them a chance to keep their nerve.

NIC. Now what is the point of that ?

PHAED. What a poor fool I am ! I have completely missed the road in life. Friends are the greatest blessings of our existence ; if I don't know—have never understood—that this fact must be observed,—if some of my friends are scheming against me, and others useless, and I am unaware of it—what is the good of living ?

NIC. What do you mean ? What has upset you ?

PHAED. You ask me that ?

NIC. I do. And it astounds me beyond measure to see you exasperated with me.

PHAED. Tell me, do you remember that I told you the whole story, loving the woman as I did, and concealed nothing about my own affairs from you ?

NIC. You told me everything, I don't contradict you. Only have patience !

PHAED. Patience ! Her father was going to take her away from me, and you have the impudence to think you would marry her ! I know !

LITERARY PAPYRI

(e) The girl and her parents prepare to enter the house of a neighbour who has promised his daughter to Moschion, the girl's brother ; and has undertaken to provide the wedding feast and ceremonies. This scene may afford an important clue for the reconstruction of the plot as a whole. Schroeder observes that " in the New Comedy, nuptials prepared by parents are hardly ever fulfilled." So perhaps Moschion now refused to attend and to wed the neighbour's daughter. His motive would be that he and the girl, apparently his sister, are in love. Hence her terrified exclamation after the recognition, v. 39, " Is Moschion my brother ? " In the end it will appear that Moschion is only an adopted son, and he and the girl will marry.

In v. 6, Eleusis may be the Egyptian Eleusis, suburb of Alexandria, a low quarter. Hence it has been plausibly conjectured that this play was performed in Egypt, perhaps written in Egypt. (Cf. however Robert, loc. cit. : he infers from the word λαμπαδηφόρος v. 31, that the scene is Athenian, and Eleusis therefore the Attic town.)

(a) . . . the parents lost their baby, or gave it to a relative to bring up, or wrote their address falsely in the registers. . . . to give such evidence ; you could find people to give it, almost anywhere in the city. it were in inverted commas: this, I think, is as awkward as it is unnecessary), and the poor Donkey rushed from one place to another and one duty to another: therein resembling our slave. τὸ βαλανεῖόν ἐστ' ὄνος may, as Crusius suggests, signify "the whole bathing-place is nothing but cries of "Donkey." Crusius's interpretation of the joke is less satisfactory,—bathers, laden like donkeys with bathing-gear, waited impatiently for the vacation of "places," and joyfully greeted the departure of the present occupants, who would themselves be laden with gear. Thus ὄνος προσέρχεται means, "Here comes a departing bather." But the bathers themselves would not be heavily laden; and the situation would hardly illustrate the discomforts of our slave.

SLAVE. . . . upon my word! . . . I shall run away as fast as I can . . . I cannot have leisure. . . .

(Traces of one line)

It seems to me I'm living in the trenches, not in the city. Whenever there's a party, you keep shouting to the servants: "bring us a chorus-girl!" . . . there is a bath, . . . you know (the bathman?) is everywhere . . . he carries everything round on him. The Donkey will go straight to the first caller: when a place is quitted, and the guest shouts—up comes the Donkey; another shouts at once, and then another—up comes the Donkey; yet another shouts—the whole establishment is nothing but the Donkey. So, if there is a drinking-party or a sacrifice, I know you'll be crying "bring us a musician. Who is getting things ready? The . . . and couches must be ready there!"

MASTER. I dislike your conversation.

TWO PROLOGUES [End 3 B.C.]

Each is written in a different hand, neither in the hand which wrote the recto. In the first piece, the words of each line are repeated in the same metre but in a different order in a companion line. In the second, after an introductory passage, the plot was unfolded in lines which began in order with letters A, B, Γ, Δ, E and so on to the end of the alphabet. It seems clear that neither prologue has any necessary connexion with the comedy written on the recto.

73 [1 A.D.] FRAGMENT OF A MIME

Ed. pr. Vitelli-Norsa, Studi Italiani di Filologia Classica, x. 1932, pp. 119 and 249. Republished by ed. pr. in Papiri Greci e Latini*, xi. 1935, no. 1214 with Plate. See Körte, Archiv, xi. 266; Eitrem, *Symb. A magic ceremony taken from contemporary life. Comparatively straightforward and unadorned: yet the omission of certain essential parts of the ritual (Eitrem, p. 28) shews that the poet's art is studied and selective. A female magician and her assistant are performing an occult ceremony designed to liberate a group of persons (probably women) from illness or distress inflicted by Hecate. The scene is an inner room, of which the doors are closed, to be opened only when all is ready for the climax of the ceremony (v. 11). The sorceress commands her patients to set down a table "just as it is," i.e. immediately. Then they must take salt in their hands (a measure of protection against malevolent spirits) and laurel about their ears (another protective or apotropaic measure; their ears, because just such openings to the body might give access to the demon). Thus equipped they are to sit beside the hearth; which here, as often, serves for an altar. There follow preparations for the sacrifice of a dog. The magician bids her assistant give her a sword—two-edged, as usual in these ceremonies. A dog (commonly the sacrifice in a rite concerning Hecate) is brought to her. Asphalt, a torch and incense are held ready for the act of lustration or purification which must accompany the sacrifice. The climax is now at hand. The doors are opened wide, letting the moonlight in. The patients are exhorted to keep their eyes fixed on the door. The torch is extinguished. Auspicious silence is demanded, and the invocation of—or imprecation against—Hecate begins.

Theocritus, according to the Scholiast on Idyll ii. 69, borrowed from Sophron τὴν τῶν πραγμάτων ὑπόθεσιν: in the preface to the same poem, Theocritus is censured for his ἀπειροκαλία in borrowing the character Thestylis from Sophron—not necessarily from the same mime, of course. Theocritus's model was taken to be that mime of Sophron's which was entitled τὰ γυναῖκες αἱ φαντι τὰν θεὰν ἐξελᾶν: of which one fragment, relating to magic, survives already (Athen. xi. 480 b). To this mime Kaibel assigned six other fragments which are or may be concerned with magic. There was however still no evidence for a fair conclusion about the subject of the mime, or even about the meaning of its title.

That our fragment belongs to Sophron is made highly probable, if not certain, by the occurrence in it of the phrase πεῖ γὰρ ἄσφαλτος; attributed to Sophron by Annonius, de from which he was borrowing : there is of course no reason to suppose that this was the only mime which Sophron wrote about a magic ceremony. N.B. further that it is not certain that this mime portrays an exorcism of Hecate : a θεοξενία seems equally possible, cf. vv. 17-18 (Chantraine).

In Ammonius loc. cit. the words πῆ γὰρ ἄσφαλτος are followed by ποῖος εἰλωσκοπεῖται. Kaibel, wishing to introduce Thestylis from the preface to Theocr. ii., changed this to ποῖ (or πῆς), Θεοστυλί, σκοπῆι τύ; and added it to the fragment πῆ γὰρ ἄσφαλτος. If Ammonius's quotation from Sophron was taken from our mime (which is not absolutely certain: the phrase πῆ, κτλ. may well have occurred more than once in Sophron), Kaibel's connexion of the two clauses is now seen to be false.

SORCERESS. Put the table down just as it is. Take a lump of salt in your hands and laurel beside your ears. Now go ^a to the hearth and sit down. Give me the sword, you : bring the dog here. Why, where is the pitch ?

ASSISTANT. Here it is.

SORCERESS. Take the taper and the incense. Come, let me have all the doors open ! You watch over there. Put the torch out, just as it is. Let me have silence, now, while in these ladies' name I do my fighting.—Lady Goddess, (you have found) your feast and faultless offerings . . .

^a ποτιβάντες : the masc. particip. here must probably denote (or include) men ; instances quoted of the masc. particip. used of women, cf. Kühner-Gerth, i. 82, are not parallel to our passage : as Chantraine observes, the alleged parallels all have a character of generality which is not present here. It is not at all unlikely that some of the participants in Sophron's μῖμοι γυναικείοι, esp. mute persons, were male : see Kereñyi, p. 4.

LAMENT FOR A COCK [1 A.D.]

Phil. v. 1909, 158: Platt, Class. Rev. 13, 440; Postgate, ibid. 441.

Fragment from the end of a lament for the loss of a fighting-cock. The speaker is a man, or youth. Traces of an earlier column in the left-hand margin prove that this was a fairly long piece.

. . . we can . . . my cock . . . after (?) a walk . . . beside the sea-bedewed . . . from its childhood my friend Tryphon guarded it, watching over it like a baby in his arms. I know not whither I may go: my ship is wrecked. I weep for the darling bird that I have lost! Come, let me embrace its chick, this child of the fighter, the beloved, the gallant Greek! For his sake I was accounted a success in life, I was called a happy man, gentleman, among those who love their pets. I fight for life—my cock has gone astray: he has fallen in love with a sitting hen, and left me in the lurch. I will set a tombstone above my heart, and be at rest. And you, my friends—goodbye to you!

The scene is the coast of a barbarian country bordering on the Indian Ocean. The subject is the adventures of Charition, a young Hellene woman, and a party of other Hellenes. Charition is in the power of barbarians. Their king (who can speak some Greek) intends to sacrifice her to Selene, in whose temple she has taken refuge. Her brother has arrived with a party of Hellenes: and they effect her rescue by making her captors drunk.

This is a low sort of music-hall performance. Such are the lack of invention in the story, and of inspiration in the style, that the chief sources of amusement are the dirty humour of the Clown and the gibberish of the savages. It is indeed a far cry from Attic Tragedy: yet thereto it owes, however remotely, its plot. Euripides' Iphigenia in

[2 A.D.]

Tauris was evidently the model for the story (see Winter, p. 26 : Charition = Iphigenia ; the barbarian king = Thoas ; the foolish friend (B) = Pylades ; in both works the sister, priestess of a goddess in a barbaric country, is rescued by her brother who outwits the local king. Most striking, too, is the parallel between the theft of the sacred image in I.T. and the proposed theft of the goddess's property in our mime). Euripides' Cyclops probably suggested the detail of the heroine's escape.

The date of the composition is uncertain : probably not much earlier than the age of the Papyrus itself ; late 1st or early 2nd century A.D. would be a likely date.

The barbarian " language " : Hultzsck (loc. cit. : cf. Sama Sastri, ap. Rice, loc. cit.) suggested that it may wholly or partly represent an ancient Indian dialect. There are, it seems, a few more or less striking coincidences, e.g. κοῦζει = konča (Dravidian, " a little ") ; πετρεκιω = pātrakke (Kanarese, " to a cup ") ; πανουμβρητικα = pānam amrita (Sanskrit, " a drink, nectar "). But it is doubtful whether these coincidences are more significant than e.g. the equation ουενι = veni (Latin, " come "). Rice (loc. cit., cf. Knoke, p. 22) was sceptical about the theory of Hultzsck : to which Barnett, loc. cit., dealt what to the layman seems a death-blow. In any case, the ancient audiences, of course, would not have understood a syllable of the jargon ; they merely rejoiced in the exquisite humour of polysyllabic nonsense.

The characters : A is Charition, the heroine ; B is a buffoon ; Γ is Charition's brother, who rescues her ; Δ is captain of the rescue-ship ; Ε is one of the Greek party (Winter, pp. 34-35, thinks him identical with Ϛ : unlikely and unnecessary); Ϛ (Ϛ in the Papyrus) and Ζ are barbarians; whose king is designated ΒΑΣ(ΙΛΕΥΣ); the sign Κοι(νή), "all together," denotes the unanimous voice of a group, whether of Greeks or of barbarians; at v. 9 enters a group of barbarian women, returned from hunting.

Stage-directions: Τ (τ̄ in the Papyrus) probably refers to the music, and may stand for Τ(υμπανισμός): cf. τ(υμπανισμός) πολ(ύς), τ(υμπανισμός) έ (= πεντάκις?). Κροῦσ(ις) = "a striking" (of musical instruments). The two strokes, = (curved, ∞, in the Papyrus), which sometimes stand before or after Τ but more often by themselves, may also have some musical significance (Winter, pp. 40-42 suggests that they are a conventional drawing of castanets; the straight horizontal dash — may similarly depict some sort of flute or pipe). The word πορδ(ή), once associated with the remarks of the Clown, is surely a stage-direction: it may have played an integral part in the action of the farce (Winter, p. 45: artillery to repel the approach of the barbarians, cf. vv. 45-46). V. 101 καταστολή probably means "Finale" or "Dénouement," cf. καταστροφή, p. 364 below.

The piece is written in vaguely rhythmical prose, with one short metrical interval (95-98 Sotad.; 103 iamb.; 105-110 and 112 troch. tetr.; 111 iamb.).

Ed. pr. *Grenfell-Hunt, P. Oxy. iii. 1903, no. 413, p. 41. See Crusius, Herodae Mimiambi, p. 110; Sudhaus, Hermes, 41, 1906, 247; Knox, Philol. 81, 243; Mantouffiel, de opusculis graecis, pp. 46 and 138, qu. v. for further bibliography; Powell-Barber, New Chapters, i. 122; Reich, der Mimus, i.; Lyngby, Eranos, 26, 52; Winter, op. cit. p. 49; Knoke, op. cit. (revised text), p. 35.

I follow Crusius's text in the distribution of parts from vv. 60-end (except in v. 61, where he makes no change of speaker after γελᾶσω). This distribution, however incorrect it may be in detail, is certainly correct in principle. The division of the piece into separate scenes is based upon no explicit indication in Π, but appears to be a necessary expedient. I suppose a pause of only a few seconds at the end of each scene: longer intervals are unlikely. The Archimima leaves the stage at v. 10 εἰσελεύσομαι; there is an interval after εἰσελθόντες v. 19; again after ἔλθετε v. 26 the Adulteress departs, and returns almost immediately, ἐξιοῦσα v. 26; she leaves again at εἰσελθε v. 35, at ἀπελθόντες καὶ ἡμεῖς v. 44, at εἰσελθοῦσα v. 51, and at εἰσελθόντες v. 56. A break in the performance is most clearly indicated by v. 10; the slaves remove their victims, and the Adulteress says that she will go indoors; but in the same line the slaves have evidently returned, their mission accomplished (or rather frustrated); clearly there was a pause in the action after εἰσελεύσομαι v. 10, during which the Adulteress left the scene for a moment. Cf. vv. 25-26: the Adulteress orders the execution of Aesopus,—and at once inspects his corpse; again, there was a brief interval for the fulfilment of her commands.

It is probable that all the rôles were enacted by one Archi-mima (Winter, p. 54): for the sake of clearness, I write as though the separate characters were portrayed by separate actors. The plot appears to be:—

Scene I—The Adulteress (hereinafter A) has made advances to a slave Aesopus, who refuses her. She condemns him to death, together with his mistress Apollonia. Slaves remove the convicts: A goes indoors to await their report.

Scene II—The slaves, who have probably released their fellows through compassion, report that Aesopus and Apollonia have escaped, apparently through divine intervention. A demands that they be caught and brutally executed. She withdraws again.

Scene III—Apollonia returns and is arrested; her execution and the arrest of Aesopus are commanded.

Scene IV—Aesopus is brought, apparently dead, to the door. A mourns him.

Scene V—A plots with Malacus (a slave who is eager to enjoy the favour of his mistress) to poison her husband. They withdraw together.

Scene VI—A inspects the body of Apollonia, who has been brought in—apparently dead—and laid beside Aesopus. A sends a parasite to summon her doomed husband, and departs to prepare the fatal table.

Scene VII—A announces that all is ready, and goes indoors to accomplish her murderous designs.

Scene VIII—The husband is carried on to the scene, apparently dead. The Archimima has now finished the rôle of the Adulteress, and begins to enact a dialogue between the minor characters. The parasite laments the passing of his master; Malacus interrupts and begins a dirge; but suddenly the husband, who was only feigning death, leaps up and orders Spinther to helabour Malacus. The husband now perceives the figure of Aesopus, and inquires who he is : from the reply it appears that Aesopus and Apollonia are both alive and well.

This is a fine piece of writing in its class. The construction is elaborate and dramatically good ; the language is powerful, picturesque, sometimes even poetical. This author, who probably lived near the end of the 1st century A.D., controls the Greek language easily, and affects a pleasing directness and economy of style. This Archimima has indeed an excellent part to play, varied and vivid,—first furious and vindictive, then repentant and sentimental ; first exultant, then subtly cunning and sinister.

The writer's model was clearly the fifth Mime of Herodes : and it may not be fanciful to detect the influence of Euripides' Medea upon the character of the Archimima.

A QUARREL

Ed. pr. Körte, Archiv für Papyrusforschung, vi. 1913, p. 1 with Plate. See Milne, Cat. Lit. Pap. B.M. no. 97, p. 67; Crusius, Herodae Mimambi, p. 117; Manteuffel, de opusculis graecis, p. 146 and Hermes, 65, 126; de Stephani, Phil. Woch. 1914, 253; Knox, Philol. 81, 243; Körte, Archiv, vii. 153; Srebrny, Journ. Minist. Nar. Prosv., Petrograd, 1917 and Eos, 30, 1927, p. 401; Powell-Barber, New Chapters, i. 123.

About this fragment speculation has exceeded all reasonable bounds. Readers may peruse the piece and decide whether there is the least evidence for the greater part of e.g. Crusius's interpretation:—"muliercula iuvenem amans atque divitiis sibi devinciens; iuvenis mollis et asotos, ei non tribuens quod postulat sed πηγίζων [this word depends on an unnecessary correction]. Vir senescens Ἴων πατήρ cinaedologus cum iuvene Veneris masculae vinculo coniunctus, mulierculae infestus. Iuvenis frater, homo frugi sed qui mulierem divitem a patre commendatam a fratre spretam domo recipere non dedignetur"—more follows, even more widely separated from the evidence. Manteuffel does not recede so far from the facts until the end, when he bases inferences upon the most questionable supplements of vv. 19, 21, 24.

If we return to the fragment itself, we shall not diverge very much from the sober conclusions of the first editor. This much is certain:—

(a) At least five characters are designated in Π: A, B, Γ, Δ and some sort of group or "chorus" denoted by the marginal direction Κοι(νή). Γ is evidently named "Father Ion" (v. 7); A is probably a woman (ταύτης v. 3); Δ is a man (v. 25), probably a young man (v. 17, he refers to his father); another man is referred to several times (v. 13 αὐτοῦ, v. 15 τούτωι, v. 18 τούτου); this could be, but is not necessarily, B (I refer to him hereafter as X). B may possibly be a buffoon, like the clown in P. Oxy. 413. The identity of the "chorus" is quite uncertain.

B παρὰ τοῖς ἀλλήλους [π]υτίζουσι.

[2 A.D.]

(b) There is a dispute between Δ and X: possibly concerned with A, who complains of unjust treatment. Γ acts as arbiter in the quarrel; he is a friend of the father of X, and seems likely to give his verdict in favour of X. X has recently suffered a misfortune (possibly the death of his father, vv. 15, 18), and Γ has come to sympathize with him.

Beyond this point I perceive no reference which is both legitimate and important. Two young men are quarrelling, probably about a woman; an older man is arbitrating between them: he is predisposed in favour of one of the two disputants. The cause of the quarrel probably lay in the question of the possession of the woman: the result of it is altogether beyond conjecture.

[This fragment is inscribed ἐκ βιβλιοθήκης Πρασίου Ἡρακλείδης: evidently the texts of these wretched and ephemeral pieces were circulated for the delectation of the reading public.]

79 [3 A.D.] DAMSEL IN DISTRESS

Ed. pr. *Milne, Catalogue of the Literary Papyri in the British Museum, 1927, no. 52, p. 39, and Addenda, p. xv. See Schubart, Gnomon, iv. 1928, 398; Wüst and Crönert, Philol. 84, 1928, 153; Körte, Archiv, x. 62; Manteuffel, Eos, 32, 1929, 34 and de opusculis graecis, p. 56 and p. 161; Knox, J.E.A. 15, 140.

Interpretation of this fragment has gone beyond the bounds of legitimate inference. In the following account I include only so much as I judge to be certain or highly probable.

(1) The Characters. (a) A young girl (παρθένος v. 17, κόρη v. 18); (b) a brother, or sister, or both (σύγγονε v. 4, φιλάδελφε v. 6). φιλάδελφε is so sharply contrasted with σύγγονε βάρβαρε that two persons are probably intended. These may be a brother and a sister, or two brothers (less probably two sisters, for vv. 8-16 (especially 12-16) are much more suitable to a brother). (c) A nurse (τροφέ v. 5), who is probably included in the μαινόμεναι v. 1: that plural proves the presence of more than one woman beside the maiden; for their identity, there is no need to look beyond the nurse and the sister whose presence we have doubtfully inferred under (b) above. (d) The young woman's father (πάτερ v. 27 : Wüst reads μάτερ, but πάτερ seems to be fairly certain in Π).

(2) The distribution of the lines among the characters. The Papyrus gives no indication of change of speaker. It is certain that the maiden speaks vv. 1-7, probable that her brother speaks vv. 9-16.

It is natural to suppose that the speaker changes where the metre changes ; the whole being performed by one Archimima, and the transition from one character to another being made clearer to the audience by a simultaneous change of metre. I have followed precedent in distributing the parts on this assumption : though neither this nor any other distribution is free from objections. In a good author, v. 17 and v. 18 would naturally be spoken by different characters (λέγε παρθένε 17, εἰπέ κόρη 18). Yet if change of metre is to accompany change of speaker, and vice versa, these lines must be said by the Nurse. For on this theory, the brother must speak vv. 9-16, and therefore cannot speak vv. 17-21; the sister would not address her own sister as παρθένε, κόρη; the father could not speak v. 20.

The plain fact is that the evidence is not sufficient to allow a certain, or even a highly probable, distribution of the lines. The original assumption, that change of metre denotes change of speaker, may be wholly false. All we can say is, that any other distribution (e.g. that of Wüst) departs still farther from the available evidence and produces no better a result.

(3) The nature of the plot. The maiden is being questioned against her will by distracted womenfolk. Someone—probably her brother—reproaches her for want of confidence in him. Others coax her to reveal her secret, which is suspected to conceal a love-affair. The end is uncertain. There is a reference to a carousing reveller, who is a light o' love; and to a festival by night. All that we may fairly conclude from this is:—the maiden has been violated at a midnight festival; she is deeply distressed, but ashamed to confess to her womenfolk, who sorrow and sympathize with her ; or to her brother, who is annoyed that she has not had confidence in him. It is probable that she will discover that her unknown violator is none other than the youth whom she anyway desires to marry. (The resemblance to the plot of Menander's Epitrepontes is obvious.)

Beyond this all is uncertain. Nothing is gained by introducing Mothers and Friends into a fragment which itself affords no evidence of their participation ; nothing is gained by elaborating the plot beyond this point. Above all, inferences based upon vv. 25-27 are worthless ; so doubtful is the reading of the text there.

(4) The Metres. 1-7 anap. dim., partly full, partly with (resolved) iambic end = ἀπόκροα, Wilam. Gr. GIRL. Stop flaying yourselves,^a you crazy creatures, and stop insulting my character !—Why have you thrown yourselves about my ankles ? Cruel brother, do you call to me ? It is easy to infer that both fragments describe the worship of the same goddess—Aphrodite of the Flowers, at Cnossus, whose altar stands in a grove with a meadow beside it (cf. no. 88 (a) below). But decisive evidence is wanting, since it is not certain either that v. 1 of our fragment has any reference to Cretans (though it is probable), or that Sappho is the author of the other fragment. ANONYMOUS, perhaps BACCHYLIDES (or possibly SIMONIDES)

*Ed. pr. Vogliano, Papiri Greci e Latini, x. 1932, no. 1181, p. 169. See Milne, Class. Rev. 47, 1933, 62; Snell, Bacchylides fr. dub. 60, 61; Severyns, Bacchylide, 1933, p. 142; Davison, Class. Rev. 1934, 205 and literature quoted there and by Snell, loc. cit.; Bowra, Class. Rev. 1933, 440; Körte, Archiv, xiii. 1938, 92; Snell, Hermes, Einzelschr. 5, 1937, 98.

Ascribed to Bacchylides on grounds of style: especially because of the abundance of compound adjectives, and the preference for new formations (cf. in the first three lines of the second piece ἰοδερκής, νεοκέλαδος). Further: the fragments seem to be a continuation of the alphabetically arranged Dithyrambs of Bacchylides in the B.M. papyrus. The latter run in order down to the letter I: the second of our pieces begins with the letter Λ; and it is not unlikely that the first begins with the letter Κ (Κάβειροι, or Κάστωρ καὶ Πολυδεύκης). But it must be confessed that the subject-matter of the first piece is uncertain (Milne may be right in detecting a reference (vv. 12-15) to the story of divine twins, one of whom was to dwell in Hades, the other on earth. Castor and Polydeuces would then be the most natural subject: though others—e.g. the Cabiroi—cannot be excluded from consideration). Further, Davison is justly sceptical about the coincidence that "a papyrus discovered at Oxyrhynchus in 1928 should fit so closely on to the end of a papyrus discovered in a tomb at Meir in 1896."

Davison argues for the ascription to Simonides. But the evidence is not much, if at all, stronger. Simonides wrote a poem about women in exile (Plutarch, On Exile 8, 602 c-d); "that poem included at least one lament in direct speech." Now the first of our pieces also may be interpreted to be a poem about women in exile (from Troy); and their lamentations are in direct speech (1-5). So far the ascription to Simonides rests on the supposition that his treatment of this subject in this manner must have been unique. But Davison observes further that the metre of our fragment corresponds in part with that of Plutarch's quotation (fr. 28 Diehl):—

ὕπο πειθέος ἡμεναί ἰσχει δὲ με πορφύρεας	}	Telesill.

Plutarch's next word, ὀρυμαγδός, can hardly be made to correspond to Π's διμενακαί, whatever that may stand for (Δὲ μὲν ἄκαιρον Milne). Davison suggests that it may be a case of a choriamb corresponding to an ionic a minore: but there is no parallel (Simon. fr. 13, v. 7 = v. 21 is far too hypothetical to be used as evidence here). We must then suppose that Plutarch has "omitted either a word equivalent to one long syllable, . . . or a whole line, before ὀρυμαγδός."

The coincidences of subject-matter, treatment, and metre^a are admittedly curious: but in my opinion they fall far short of proof of Simonidean authorship. It is tenable, too, that the style of the fragments as a whole is by no means reminiscent of Simonides.

" . . . in defence of our youth, checks the glance of foemen upon us, we should endure to sit beneath an infinite load of sorrow. For in bitter war . . .

(Fragments of eight lines)

And multitudinous cries . . . went up to Heaven for unexpected joy, and the song of men . . . on seats . . . was not silent; and young women prayed . . . Iê, Iê.

^a The coincidence of metre depends, of course, on the scansion of πορφύρεας: it may seem more natural to scan ἰσχει δὲ με πορφύρεας ἄλος ἀμφίταρσσομένης ὀρυμαγδός, a sequence of lyric dactyls: if so, there is no metrical coincidence at all, and the case for Simonides becomes very weak indeed.

It is however perhaps more probable that the supplement should be Εὐφώρατ[ος] "The Easy Prey," a synonym for Homer's Dolon, who is in fact the subject of the song. The identity of the παρθένος will then remain uncertain; though Athene is the most natural candidate, since she is especially the goddess who protects and prospers Odysseus, the captor of Dolon; cf. Homer, II. x. 245, 277, 284, 295, where Athene's influence in this episode is particularly stressed; cf. further, II. x. 507, Pindar, Nem. viii. 15 (Beazley). ^d Probably Athene. ^e An "improvement" on Homer: who however strongly implies a more or less direct intervention of Athene in this episode. The evidence for the connexion of these fragments with some parts of the story of Odysseus is as follows:—

(1) V. 48 πολυαινο[. . .]σευ. πολυαιν' Ο[δυσ]σευ is a possible supplement; πολύαινος is used by Homer of Odysseus only.

(2) V. 20 Κίρκας, the only other proper name in the piece, is clearly consistent with the above connexion.

(3) There is some evidence that vv. 47 sqq. are concerned with the underworld, cf. Εὐμενιδᾶν, ὑπὸ ζόφου δ' ἀερό[εντος, φθιμένων βασιλῆα πανδ[οκέα. Now in v. 43 the speaker addresses his mother, μᾶτερ ἐμά: these words, and also the words in the next line ἀλλ' ἄγε μοι τόδε, occur also in the scene in Homer where Odysseus addresses his mother (Od. xi. 164, 170). The coincidence in phraseology is not very surprising; but in a scene relating to the underworld, and one already conjectured on other grounds to deal with Odysseus, the coincidence becomes not altogether negligible.

(4) The adjectives πολυπλανής v. 32, δολομήτας v. 33

describe Odysseus aptly. And the references to wanderings over the sea, v. 36 ἀνὰ κύματα πόντια . . . ἀλαλημένος, after v. 46 σὺν ναὶ μελαίνοι πλαγχθεῖς suit his story well.

The evidence for the connexion of vv. 1-31 with the story of Elpenor is (1) the reference to Circe v. 20, from whose roof he fell to his death, (2) references to death and a burial in the fragments. This is therefore a possible, though hazardous, speculation.

Ed. pr. assigned these fragments to Timotheus: who (according to some MSS. of Etym. Magn.) wrote an Odyssey in four books. We know that he wrote four dithyrambic on the story of Odysseus—Elpenor fr. 4 Wilam., Cyclops fr. 5-8 Wilam., Scylla fr. 17-19 Wilam., Laertes fr. 9 Wilam. It is natural to suppose (with ed. pr.) that these four dithyrambic constituted the four books of the Odyssey. But if this is so, it is unlikely that our fragments are part of that poem; for though the reference to Elpenor (if there is one) would suit this theory well, there is no room in the above scheme of Timotheus's Odyssey for the Νέκεια, or scene in the underworld; which is the only scene which can be inferred with probability from our fragments.

Further, the style of these fragments does not recall

Timotheus. We miss the bold—indeed the ludicrous—metaphors and paraphrases of the poet of The Persians; we miss the extravagant compound adjectives (κρατεραυγής is bold; βαθύπορος, βαθύπολος, θρασύαιγος, εὐερίστης are comparatively tame). And we can hardly believe that Timotheus wrote so simply and clearly, or that he copied Homeric epithets and turns of phrase so submissively. This is the

90 [End 3 B.C.] HYMN TO DEMETER

Ed. pr. Norsa, Studi Italiani di Filologia Classica, N.S. v. 1927, p. 87 + Gallavotti, ibid. ix. 1931, p. 37. See Powell-Barber, New Chapters, ii. 61 and iii. 195; Maas, Gnomon, 1927, 439; Körte, Archiv, viii. 1927, 255 and Hermes*, 66, 1931, 442; Stoessl, P.-W.-K. s.v. Philiskos, no. 4.

The ascription to Philicus is based on Hephaestion, Ench. p. 30, 21: Φίλικος δὲ ὁ Κερκυραῖος, εἰς ὧν τῆς Πλειάδος, ἑξαμέτρῳ (sc. χοριαμβικῶι) συνέθηκεν ὄλον ποίημα τῆι χθονίηι μυστικὰ Διήμητρι τε καὶ Φερσεφόνηι καὶ Κλυμένῳ τὰ δῶρα: i.e. Philicus wrote a Hymn to Demeter in choriambic hexameters; our fragment, on the same subject and in the same peculiar metre, is almost certainly a portion of that Hymn. The cult of Demeter was at this time very popular in Alexandria: new details of ritual had been instituted by royal command κατὰ μίμησιν τῶν Ἀθηῶν (Schol. Callim. Hymn vi. 1). But it is clear that our poem was not a cult-song. It was an exercise in poetry—especially in metre—intended for a learned audience (Gallavotti, p. 56, Körte, 402

*p. 443 : evidence of the line quoted by Hephaestion, almost certainly from the beginning of our poem, καινογράφου συνθέσεως τῆς Φιλίκου, γραμματικοί, δῶρα φέρω πρὸς ὑμᾶς). So far as we can see, the poem was obscurely learned, varied in incident, original in metre.

The action from vv. 4-15 is fairly clear. A woman (or goddess) has just finished speaking. The Nymphs and Graces and a crowd of mortal women do homage to Demeter, in the manner of subjects doing obeisance to an Eastern potentate. They honour her, as mortal victors at pan-Hellenic contests were honoured, by showering leaves over her—only they must throw whatever plants or grasses they can find : there are no leaves, for Demeter has made the earth unfruitful. Then from Halimous—here apparently located among the hills of Attica—comes Iambe (there was a shrine of Demeter and Persephone at Halimous, Paus. i. 31. 1). The poet, inspired

* The metre had been used before (by Simias) ; but so far as we know, no poem had even been—or ever was again—composed solely in lines of this metre.

LITERARY PAPYRI

by the Homeric Hymn to Demeter, 202 sqq., now warns us that what follows is comic: Iambe addresses the women and Demeter with rough and ready familiarity, apologizes for her uncouth manners, admits that she has no gifts such as the goddesses and women offer, but promises to find a remedy for Demeter's sorrow.

The action of the 50 fragmentary verses which precede v. 4 in the papyrus is excessively obscure. It is probable enough that the first 21 lines narrated some part of Demeter's search for Persephone, and told how the earth was rendered unfruitful. Vv. 22-50 have been, and can be, variously interpreted.

Körte argues, with habitual skill, that they are a speech by Peitho (Persuasion), who consoles Demeter, forecasts the institution of the Eleusinian mysteries, and offers her assistance in recovering Persephone from the underworld. But great difficulty is caused by the fragments of lines 24-27

- κλω]θι λιτὰς μητρόθεν ἀταδέλφους
- ἤτ]ις ὁμόσπλαγχνον ἔθρεψα Κύπριν
- Ὠκεαν]ίη γάλα σοι, μητρὶ δ' ἐγὼ σὺναιμος
- μ]εγάλας κοινοπάτωρ λοχεύει.

If the supplement in the third line is correct, the line is most naturally taken as an address to Zeus, reminding him that Amalthea, daughter of Oceanus, was his nurse. But who is then the speaker? Neither Demeter nor Peitho can say μητρὶ δ' ἐγὼ σύναϊμος : Peitho, because it would not be true ; Demeter, because she had the same father (Cronus), as well as the same mother, as Zeus ; possibly the next line continued πατρὶ τε, or καὶ πατρὶ ; but the phrase μητρόθεν ἀνταδέλφους suggests that the speaker is sister of the listener on the mother's, not on the father's, side ; it may also be said that μητρὶ δ' ἐγὼ σύναϊμος is a most unnatural phrase for a sister to use to a brother—it should mean " I am of the same kin as your mother." Further, neither Peitho nor Demeter can—so far as we know—say ὁμόσπλαγχνον ἔθρεψα Κύπριν. Kōrte admits these objections, but can do nothing to remove them.

So far as I can discover, the only figure in mythology who suits the four fragmentary lines quoted above is Dione. She is sister of Rhea, Zeus's mother (μητρὶ δ' ἐγὼ σύναϊμος : μητρόθεν ἀνταδ. will then = of your mother's sister) : she brought up Aphrodite (ἔθρεψα Κύπριν : ὁμόσπλαγχνον obscurely referring to the fact that she is daughter in common to Zeus and Dione) : further, Dione is anciently a daughter of Oceanus and Tethys (Hes. Theogon. 353 : a Nereid, Apollod. i. 12), therefore a sister of Amalthea (Ὠκεαν]ώη γάλα σοι) ; so, although she is here regarded as daughter of Uranus, her connexion with the Oceanids may have remained close. But I have no evidence for a close connexion of Dione with Demeter, and therefore no reason why she should intercede in this poem on Demeter's behalf.

“ . . . bring Persephone to the starlight . . . you shall never stumble, where I lead. . . . Take up the torches, unknit your heavy brow.”

She ceased: . . . the Nymphs and Graces hearkened to righteous Persuasion, and together in a ring around her all the swarm of women did

Now by some chance Halimous sent forth that old woman, all unknown among her mountain-haunts, yet timely come. The tale of humour is good for the solemn spirit.—She stood there and cried at once aloud and boldly “ Don’t throw her the fodder of goats ! That is no remedy for a starving god ; it is ambrosia that supports her delicate belly ! Now do you, great Spirit, give ear to Iambe from Attica. I have some benefit to offer. I have given^a tongue to foolish chatter like a country-cousin gossip. These goddesses have given you, Goddess, chalices and . . . wreaths and water drawn in the stream^b : and now from these women your gift is the grass, the diet of the timorous deer. The chief interest of this poor composition lies in its metre: the regular combination of dactylic hexameter and tetrameter is familiar to us from Horace, Carm. i. 7. 28, but unique in Greek literature. Ed. pr. observes that the writer seems in vv. 3-10 to be contradicting Callimachus, who (Hymn to Zeus 57-66) had denied that the three gods cast lots for their empires, maintaining that Zeus won his place of honour by his own prowess. to tell how Pluto stole Persephone, and how Demeter sought her.

This piece is not "literature" in the narrower Alexandrian sense: it is the work of an amateur, e.g. a schoolmaster or public servant: it is interesting to observe how quickly and how far the work of Callimachus (and others) penetrated and provoked imitation. Here the influence of learned Alexandrian poetry is clear from both metre and style (e.g. Ἀγασίλας for the king of Hades; μέλισσαι for the priestesses of Demeter; the form Ποσειδᾶν accus. and the compound (new) ἀλμυροδίνης).

To raise a twofold hymn to Demeter of many names I start—hither and hear it, priestesses! ^a Once on a time they ^b cast the lot amidst the immortal gods, which one should rule which district. To him first came the lot, ^c that he—Poseidon, ^d who holds the trident—should receive the salt eddies of the deep sea. Zeus, the son of Cronus, won the wide starry heaven to hold forever as his kingdom. And Agesilas ^e won Tartarus to be the district of his tendance. And all the gods were satisfied therewith. this kind of composition. We observe in it monotony of metre; lack of taste in phraseology, and of imagination in sentiment and description. The time and place of such work is unknown, but doubtless vaguely Hellenistic.

The influence of Timotheus is obvious in the phraseology (cf. τόσον ὠδίνων σχῆμα λοχευθέν = σχῆμα τοσοῦτων τέκνων: vv. 25 sqq. are a periphrasis for τίς ἐτικτέ με);. The writing of anapaestic lyrics survived in Tragedy after other lyrical forms became obsolete (see no. 30 above); and the metre was popular for many different kinds of composition in the 1st century A.D. This specimen is remarkably similar in form and subject-matter to no. 30 above, and to Eur. Tro. 767, etc., which must still have been its acknowledged model. It is curious that this part of ancient drama still inspired imitation so long after every other part of it had ceased to do so.

A VISIT TO THE UNDERWORLD [End 2 A.D.]

Adventures of a man who descended to the underworld in order to converse with a woman, now dead, formerly no doubt his wife or mistress. His life has evidently been brought to ruin. He blames the woman, and seeks her out among the dead to upbraid her: he accuses her of deceit (τί δέ μ' ἐξάπατῶσα; in the scraps of 17 lines which follow our fragment—itself preceded by scanty remains of 2 columns) and complains of her luxurious living (σπαταλῶσα, ibid.).

LITERARY POPYRI

There are other descriptions of a voyage to the underworld in Greek and Latin literature, and other stories of men who descended alive to Hades in pursuit of a woman: but this fragment's description of the journey is gruesome and horrible beyond any other, and the motive for the pursuit is (so far as I know) unique. The details of the journey also diverge considerably from traditional lines. Traditionally (e.g. in Vergil, Aen. vi.; Lucian, Menippus; cf. Homer, Νέκυνια;
Ar. Frogs; and other sources: Helm, Lucian und Menipp, 1906, Kap. 1, and authorities quoted there), the living visitor to the underworld must first undergo a certain preparation and ritual. When all is ready for the adventure, he crosses the Acherusian lake, sacrifices, and invokes the gods. There follows an earthquake; the visitor enters the underworld through a chasm. He must now soothe Cerberus, and persuade Charon to ferry him across the Styx. He then arrives at (1) the Plains of Sorrow, lugentes campi, where the ghosts await their turn for trial by Minos, (2) the place where guilty ghosts are punished, (3) the place where the pure, or adequately punished, souls have their abode. So much for the traditional outline, apart from details.

In our poem, several stages of the visitor's journey can be discerned. First, an oblique road—perhaps the steep entrance to Hades—leads to a place where dogs are devouring bodies. The position and description of this place do not suit the Acherusian lake; it is then probably the nearer side of a river encircling Hades; the bodies may be those of the unburied dead, who cannot be conveyed across the river. The visitor continues his journey across this river. Having passed through a "toilsome land" (which may be the region just described, or a further stage of the journey) the visitor arrives at the Shores of Ugliness. Here he sits on a rock and tries to catch a fish.—Why? Because some part of it is to be an accessory in his evocation of the dead woman with whom he wishes to converse? I know no evidence for it, and think it an improbable act at this stage of the journey. This grisly fishing remains a dark mystery. The visitor is now on the verge of a field, wherein he observes a multitude of corpses violently dead and cruelly punished.*

It is clear that the poet has departed far from the firm tradition about visits to the underworld. He ignores Cerberus, dispenses with the aid of Charon, sees nothing of the Seat of Judgement.

The language and style of the poem preclude a date of composition much earlier than the date of the papyrus itself. N.B. especially τραχηλοκοπῶ (Plutarch, Arrian, Epictetus), τάδην (new in literature), σκολοπίζω "impale." Rare uses are ἄντρον "consecrated," ἀχανής "vast," ἐμφοβος "frightened." The author was using highly poetical language, borrowed from classical and post-classical literature of different kinds.

for inclusion here the story of Myrrha's passion for her father was told in connexion with the tree which was named after her (στε]λέχους μύρρης πικρᾶς precedes το]ὺς ἀσεβεῖς γάμους). Remarkable are the long compound adjectives: other fragments too small for inclusion here present the surprising words—σηματοποικίλος, τρυγασώματος, φιλομυρτοφαγήκομος.

96 [3 A.D.] RECORD OF A CURE BY SARAPIS

Ed. pr. Abt, Archiv für Religionswissenschaft, xviii. 1915, p. 257 with Plate. See Körte, Archiv, vii. 140; *Wilamowitz, Gr. Versk. p. 150 (revised text).^a

(1) There is no doubt that our fragment is incomplete at both ends. Abt thought that v. 1 was the first line of the poem: but τῶι Λιβυκῶι φράσας v. 2, τοῦ πένητος v. 5, the obscure line v. 4, and vv. 8-9 all presuppose information which must have been given in lines preceding v. 1. (Nor is there any reason to suppose that our fragment was the first column of the roll, see Wilam. p. 150 in reply to Abt, p. 257.)

(2) *There is no doubt that the poem is not to be dated much, if at all, earlier than the papyrus itself. Ed. pr. thought it might still be a late Hellenistic piece: but it is certain (apart from linguistic evidence^b) that this poem did not survive in circulation for several centuries. For the metre (iamb. trim. catal. and phalaec.), see Wilam. ibid. pp. 137 sqq.*

(3) The action (according to Wilamowitz):—Sarapis gives two oracles, one to a Libyan (v. 2), one to a pauper (v. 5). The god undertakes to transfer to the pauper the destiny which Fate had intended for the Libyan, and vice versa: the Libyan has been given a deceptive oracle, and the pauper's malady will be transferred to him. Perhaps the transfer will be facilitated by the fact that both patients were born under the same constellation (v. 9). Thrason (the pauper: Abt thinks he is the Libyan) is now commanded to fast, and in the morning to intoxicate himself with wine, then go to sleep:

^a One word about the text: ed. pr. is not completely accurate in the details of transcription, as may be seen from the facsimile and by comparison of Wilam.'s text. Neither, unhappily, is the latter completely accurate. I have venwhen he wakes up he will be cured (v. 19). Perhaps similar advice had been given to the Libyan—only he, when he wakes up, will find that the pauper's malady has been transferred to him. Wilamowitz takes οὔτος in vv. 24, 25, 27 to refer to Thrason, νῆστις v. 22 to the Libyan.

With this view I agree, except in the assignment of parts. It seems (as Abt thought) more probable that vv. 10 sqq. are a report of the deceptive instructions which Sarapis gave to the Libyan. If this is so, the supreme difficulty in Wilam.'s view—the necessity of making οὔτος in vv. 24, 25, 27 all refer to the same person—can be avoided.^c The pauper has been told to fast and abstain, the Libyan to indulge himself. Their separate acts of conduct are then described in alternate lines. The abstinence of the pauper is to coincide in time exactly with the indulgence of the Libyan (v. 23). ὁ μὲν 21, ἐκείνος 23, οὔτος 25 and 27 are the Libyan (Thrason); ὁ δὲ 22, οὔτος 24, and the subject of 26, are the pauper. Vv. 6-7 I take to be the conclusion (τέρμα) of an oracle previously tured to make the very few trivial corrections which appeared necessary. στροφεις for τραφεις in v. 24 is not so trivial. I have had nothing but the facsimile to guide me, and shall therefore be the object of universal objurgation. But Wilam. says nothing about addition of new fragments to the text: and if he had none, his transcription of vv. 4, 18, 25 is undeniably in need of minute correction.

^b The language aims at poetical style, which it maintains in a simple way with a few lapses. The poet soared aloft to the invention of ἐξαδόχος v. 17 (here only, s.v.l.: Abt read ἐξ ἀδόλου, but the facsimile supports Wilam.).

^c The contrast is clear not only from the use of οὔτος, but also from the obvious opposition μένει κραταίως—μεθύει, ὑπομένει—πίπτει.

of transference of a disease from one man to another, there are records of cases in which the god visits a healthy offender with sickness (Herzog, p. 124 : the god usually cured the offender in the end : so here, the Libyan may have been healed in the end : the miracle-cures of Sarapis were founded on those of Asclepius, Herzog, p. 47. Beazley refers me to an interesting and apposite passage in Artemidorus, Oneirocriticon v. 9f).

. . . Sarapis is the saviour. . . told the Libyan and departed. . . and of him who possessed the ring.

The conclusion of the pauper's oracle was this : "—since, from to-morrow, a certain Libyan shall suffer a strange malady, through which I shall save you." Now this was the Libyan of whom the god had spoken, who had the same constellation as the pauper. The god appeared in the night beside him, and spoke : "Thrason, you have in full the upshot of your Fate ; not as Fate desired, but against the will of Fate : for I change the Fates about.^a . . . to-morrow, and after the fourth hour ^b souse and drink deep—having waited long without a taste of anything—nothing but unmixed wine from a full-sized ^c pitcher ; and after drinking . . . lie down and sleep. While you lie at rest, I will cure you." . . .

^a Lit. "I change the clothes of Destiny." ^b Quite early in the morning. ^c Lit. "of six measures," a new word.

SAILOR'S SONG

[3 A.D.]

This is not (as it has sometimes been alleged) a magic incantation: it is (as the imperfect tenses suggest) the song of a Rhodian sailor, sung by him when returned to Rhodes. "When I wanted to sail (to Rhodes), and to stay there (in Rhodes), I used to ask the winds to control the seas (so that I might enjoy fair weather to Rhodes)."

'Ροδίοις ἀνέ[μοις is written in the right-hand margin.

I USED to command the Rhodian winds and the quarters of Ocean, when I wanted to sail, when I wanted to stay there, I used to say to the quarters of Ocean, "Let not the seas be smitten! Subdue the Ocean to the seafarers! Lo, in full strength the wind is rising! Shut up your storm-winds, Night, and make the waters smooth to cross!"

HYMN TO FORTUNE [3 A.D.]

Hymn to Fortune, of uncertain but late era. Ed. pr. aptly compares Diehl, Anth. Lyr. Gr. ii. p. 158, fr. mel. chor. adesp. 4 (τύχα, μερόπων ἀρχὰ καὶ τέρμα resembles v. 11 : σὸν πτέρυγα χρυσέαν may have suggested πρᾶνο[v. 1]).

GODDESS of many hues and many guises and wingèd feet, partner of man's hearth and home, almighty Fortune! How may one demonstrate your power and . . . ? That which is high and mighty against your countenance you dash^a to the ground with a cloud of darkness set around it ; the mean and lowly you often exalt on your wings aloft, O mighty spirit. Shall we call you gloomy Clotho, or Necessity of sudden doom, or Iris, swift messenger of the immortal gods? Of all things the beginning and the end are yours.

^a ὑπήρικας is intended to be active transitive aorist of ὑπερίκω (ed. pr.).

almost certainly the reading of Π: ed. pr. suggests emendation to ἄκρον: πάντων Maas, Crusius.

Men used to censure me because, though shrewd enough in other ways, I was a lengthy speaker—could not express my thoughts with brevity. To this charge I lent an ear, and I composed this book of rules,^a to make the world exclaim “ Epicharmus was a philosopher, who uttered many witty sayings of many kinds in single verses : himself he lets us test his skill in brevity of speech as well ! ”

He who learns these maxims well shall appear a wise man to the world, and never talk but good sense, if he remembers every word. If one who takes this book shall be offended by some word within it—not, of course, because his own conduct is ill-considered and in conflict with my counsel—let me tell him, a broader mind is a blessing and a boon. . . .

An early Hellenistic epigram, preface to the opening of a sympotic gathering, and to the recitation of further pieces suitable to the occasion. Cf. Xenophanes fr. 1, Theognis 467.

HAIL to you, companion revellers ! With good omen I begin, and with good omen I will end my speech. When friends are come together for such purpose, they must laugh and play, behaving bravely, and rejoice in their company, and make sport of each other and utter such jests as bring laughter with them. Earnest converse must follow, and we must listen to each speaker in his turn : therein is the virtue of a merry company. And let us give ear to the leader of our revels : such is the conduct of good men, and the source of honest reputation.

TWO EPIGRAMS [Late 3 B.C.]

Vv. 6-9. The following is a brief and inadequate summary of the views of Professor D. S. Robertson. I am most grateful for his assistance, and fortunate to be able to publish so important a contribution to the understanding of this obscure passage.

(1) ζωνή is the low semicircular bounding-wall of the basin; this wall carried one or more columns (it is possible, perhaps likely, that one of a set of identical columns is being described as a typical example). The semicircle may be conceived as projecting in front of a straight rear wall.

- A = column
- B = semicircular bounding-wall
- C = rear wall
- D = mouth through which water flows

ANONYMOUS

(6) θεός v. 9 means "foundation" or "base" in a non-technical sense, i.e. all that has hitherto been described as the support for the column-shaft.

(b) An epigram, composed in the same era as the preceding one, celebrating a person distinguished in poetry and warfare. This person is undoubtedly Ptolemy IV Philopator, who won a great victory over Antiochus III at Raphia in 217 B.C., and was at the same time ambitious in the world of letters, writing a tragedy Adonis (Schol. Ar. Thesm. 1059) and setting up a temple to Homer (Aelian, V.H. 13. 22). This poem refers to a dedication to Homer (vv. 2-5): we can hardly suppose it to be other than the dedication of that temple to Homer. The parents of vv. 6-7 are then Ptolemy III Euergetes (hence ἐυεργέται v. 6) and his wife Berenice.

(a) (Vv. 3 sqq.) Gladly . . . accept the gift . . . who also set up a work in stone, an ample building for your house, having first set the bright water free. He made it into the form of a semicircle; the Parian^a boundary-wall supports the column-base in Ionian style, and within the hollow moulding speckled Syenite^b glistens near the heels^c; such is the foundation of the column.

^a Lit. "the lamp-stone," because Parian marble was quarried underground by lamplight. ^b The dappled granite of Syene. ^c For the sense of ράβδος and of περναί, see Introd. Note.

Πά[ρον ed. pr.: "having set free the white water-drop of Paros" must mean "having quarried Parian marble." But σταγών is a most unnatural word to use here with reference to marble (despite the stalactites in the underground galleries of the Parian quarries); the sense of ἐκποδίσας is very strained; and in this description of a fountain, σταγών must surely refer to the water of the spring. πά[ρος D. L. P. 6 Ed. pr. thinks ἡμισφαίρο[υ] a more probable reading. 7 στυλοῦσαι II, corr. ed. pr.

Through stone^a from Hymettus gushes forth the draught of springwater, taking up the flood from caves, itself drenched therewith. Your^b image he modelled from rich white marble, smooth-wrought, and in the midst he set Arsinoe, who shares the Nymphs's fortune every year.^c Come with good order to the fountain, Nymphs of spring-waters!

(b) Blessed Ptolemy . . . set this up to Homer . . . who wrote of old the ageless song of Iliad and Odyssey from his immortal mind. O happy benefactors of mankind! You sowed the seed of a king who excels with spear and among the Muses!

^a Fashioned, evidently, into the shape of a lion's head, through which the water poured. ^b The king's and queen's. ^c Possibly a reference to an annual ceremony in which Arsinoe was associated with the Nymphs of the spring. But we know nothing of such an association; and κατὰ πᾶν ἔτος might mean (as ed. pr. understand it) "all the year round."

traces suit εως better than ovos at end of line: but his διδασχῆς introduces an unpoetical word, and he himself is dissatisfied with γνούς. κατ' ὄναρ τέμενος is very probably the correct reading of the end, but the preceding lacuna is hard to fill.

[I omit the two fragmentary and obscure lines of Amyntas which head col. ii. (vv. 21-22) in ed. pr. : cf. however Powell, Aegyptus, loc. cit.]

The first column of this Π contains ends of lines of epigrams by Leonidas (= Anth. Pal. vii. 163) and Antipater (= Anth. Pal. vii. 164). The second column contains two poems by Amyntas (a poet hitherto unknown : evidently an Alexandrian epigrammatist of the 2nd century B.C.); one concerned with a Samian woman named Prexo, who is the subject of the two epigrams in col. i. (and also of Anth. Pal. 454

vii. 165, ascribed to Antipater or Archias); the other concerned with the capture of Sparta by Philopoemen in 188 B.C. (a variant of Anth. Pal. vii. 723). The third column contains two new dedicatory epigrams by Leonidas and Antipater, composed for one Glenis; and the first word (or two words) of another epigram, apparently also by Leonidas; at this point the scribe stopped abruptly, and wrote no more in this column.

Thus it is clear that this anthology was arranged by subject-variation (i.e. poems which were variations on the same theme were put together). And it is also clear (from the evidence of the first column) that this anthology was an ancestor, however partial and remote, of the Palatine Anthology. Now it is commonly believed that the celebrated

These are good compositions ; probably the work of a professional Alexandrian poet. It is likely that both pieces were inscribed on the dog's tombstone. The composition of two epitaphs, one elegiac and the other iambic, was a common practice at this time (Wilamowitz ap. Wilcken, loc. cit. quotes Kaibel, Epigr. Gr. 325, 462, 502, 546, 550).

For Tauron, fastening upon the massive nape, with mane and all, loosed not his teeth again until he sent it down to Hades. So he saved hunter Zenon from distress, unschooled^a; and earned his gratitude in his tomb below the earth.

(2) A dog is buried beneath this tomb, Tauron, who did not despair in conflict with a killer. When he met a boar in battle face to face, the latter, unapproachable, puffed out its jaws and, white with froth, ploughed a furrow in his breast. The other planted two feet about its back, and fastened upon the bristling monster from the middle of its breast, and wrapped him in the earth. He gave the murderer to Hades and died, as a good Indian should. He rescued Zenon, the hunter whom he followed; and here in this light dust he is laid to rest.

If the Gauls are here the objects of the king's anger, the identity of the king and the date of the occasion are still impossible to determine. The poem might refer to the war of Antiochus I against the Gauls in 277-276, again in 275 ; or to the revolt of Ptolemy II's Gallic mercenaries in 274 ; or to any one of numerous conflicts between the Seleucid empire and those Gauls who, since 275, had been settled in northern Asia Minor ; or to the war of Attalus against the Gauls in 230 ; or possibly even to a war of Antiochus III against the Gauls (Momigliano, quoting Suidas, s.v. There are other interesting possibilities ; but enough has been said to shew that without further evidence a precise identification of the king and of the occasion is absolutely impracticable.

poem in Thebes. The tablets were found in Egypt: therefore Thebes is Egyptian Thebes, unless we suppose that the author, a Macedonian (vv. 14, 16), is writing his poem during a temporary residence in Boeotian Thebes, and later travels to Egypt, taking his poem with him. Schubart's supposition, that "Pimplean Thebes" may stand here for some Macedonian town, is altogether unconvincing. He objects to the reference to Egyptian Thebes on the grounds (1) that that city was a place of small importance in the 1st century A.D. ; (2) that its market-place was so insignificant that statues of poets were not likely to be set up in it ; (3) that the outlook of vv. 14-15 is that of a man living in Hellas, or in Macedon, not in Luxor or Karnak. These are surely insufficient grounds : the city was small enough, but still people lived there ; the market-place to which the poet refers may well be that of his native town in Macedon ; the outlook of the Macedonian does not change because he happens to be staying for a time in Egypt.

POSEIDIPPUS

The composition is seen, since Schubart's drastic revision of the text (in which e.g. v. 16 ποιήμασιν ἤγον Ὀλύμπωι Diels becomes εἶοιμι δὲ βίβλον ἐλίσσων Schubart !), to be conventional enough in metre and diction, though παρηίδος is eccentric, and there are some faults which Beazley thinks (and I am loath to disagree) could never have been part of the original text, esp. 11 (τοῦ Παρίου), 13, 16-17. Vv. 11-14 were savagely crossed out in a moment of grace—not necessarily by the author himself.

MUSES^a of our city, if you have heard a song of beauty from Phoebus, god of the golden lyre, listeners undefiled, in the ravines of snowy Parnassus or at Olympus, starting for Bacchus his triennial ceremonies,^b—now join Poseidippus in his song of hateful Age, inscribing the golden leaves of your tablets. Leave your peaks, Muses of Helicon, and come, Castalian maids, to the walls of Pimplean^c Thebes. You also, god of Cynthus, loved Poseidippus once, son of Leto . . . an utterance, where the snow-white house of the Parian^d stands. With such immortal speech make answer, and let your voice, O lord, ring loud from the sanctuary, even in my ears : that the Macedonians and the peoples of the islands and the neighbours of all the Asiatic shore, may honour me.

^a These, the local Muses of the town in v. 1, return to Parnassus—or Olympus—in v. 3, shift to Helicon in v. 7, and to Delphi in v. 8. ^b For the sense of θύμελαι see L. & S.⁹, s.v. ^c If the text is sound, = "city of the Muses." ^d Apollo, god of the Delphic temple, so called because his statue there was made of Parian marble? Apollo is to declare from his shrine that Poseidippus is a great poet.

A FATHER once took his son, who was wealthy but refused him any gift at all, to Scythian Anacharsis for judgement. The son, unwilling to keep his father, cried : “ Has he not a house and properties and loads of gold ? What tyrant, then, what judge or ancient lawgiver will justly say . . . ?

His daughter may have had these pieces composed by a professional poet: however that may be, the epitaphs, though uninspired, are tolerably free from technical flaws. poem written in sorrow for the death of Baucis, a friend of her girlhood. Erinna herself is said to have died at the age of nineteen: and this poem, which (according to Suidas) consisted of 300 hexameters, was perhaps her only published work.

. . . From white horses with madcap bound into the deep wave you leapt: "I catch you," I shouted, "my friend!" And you, when you were Tortoise, ran leaping through the yard of the great court.^a

Thus I lament, unhappy Baucis, and make deep moan for you. These traces of you, dear maid, lie still glowing in my heart: all that we once enjoyed, is embers now.

We clung to our dolls in our chambers when we were girls, playing Young Wives, without a care. And towards dawn your Mother,^b who allotted wool to her attendant workwomen, came and called you to help with the salted meat. Oh, what a trembling the Bogy brought us then, when we were little ones! —On its head were huge ears, and it walked on all fours, and changed from one face to another!

of the others—who would then take her turn as Tortoise. The last two lines are given by Pollux as: (Girls) ὁ δ' ἔκγονός σου τί ποίων ἀπόλετο; (Tortoise) λευκᾶν ἀφ' ἵππων εἰς θάλασσαν ἄλατο "from white horses into the sea he leapt" (on the last word the Tortoise leaps up): hence the first line here. ^b I suspect that the "Mother" here and below (v. 16) is Erinna herself, playing "Mothers and Children" with Baucis: the "attendant toilers" would be a row of dolls, or imaginary. Both references to "Mother" seem thus more charming and apter to their contexts.

In fr. i. col. ii. of ed. pr. is a fragment of a poem entitled Ἰππ]ομέδων με(ι)ζων (cf. frs. 30-31 Powell): this perhaps dealt with the adventures of Odysseus and the Thracian King Poltys (Latte, p. 132; Serv. Aen. ii. 81, iii. 16). It is preceded in II by fragments of the Thrax, which included the stories of Clymenus and*

Harpalyce (Parthenius xiii.) and of Apriate and Trambelus (Parthenius xxvi.). The extant portions of the former story refer to the metamorphosis of Harpalyce into a bird (the χαλκίς) έτέροισω άπεχθομένην όρνισι, and the suicide of Clymenus, who, because of the terrible banquet (άεικέος αίκλου), died on his own sword (έωι θάνεν άμφι σιδήρωι). The scene of the second story is Lesbos. Where our fragment begins, Apriate is scornfully rejecting the advances of enamoured Trambelus. Then she leaps into the sea: it is uncertain whether she is rescued by dolphins or not. Thereafter begins the story of Trambelus's death at the hands of Achilles. Finally the moral is pointed at some length:— that Justice always pays in the end; this conclusion is supported briefly by two more instances from mythology.

Since my text contains some new readings, derived from a study of a photograph, I prefix the following notes. My debt to Mr. Lobel is very great.

V. 4. ακτωρ (the reading is certain) has so far defied interpretation. There is no evidence that the word can mean "suitor," and its usual sense seems irrelevant here. I have written the word as a proper name, but it remains as obscure as before. Leipephile, who was the daughter of Iolaus and wife of Phylas (Hesiod fr. 142), has no connexion in our tradition with anyone named Actor.

Apart from this difficulty, the sense of the passage as a whole is not very clear. It looks as though Apriate is taunting Trambelus while refusing to yield to his passion: "Go and court a Leipephile, or marry a Semiramis—you will never marry me!"—Why should she advise him thus? The sense may be "I hope that you may make a disastrous marriage": for Semiramis notoriously slew her lovers the next morning (Diodorus ii. 13. 4 πάντων τών εις τρυφήν άνηκόντων άπολαύσασα, γήμαι μέν νομίμως ούκ ήθέλησεν, εύλαβουμένη μή ποτε στερηθήι της άρχής, έπιλεγομένη δέ τών στρατιωτών τους εύπρεπείαι διαφέροντας, τούτοις έμίσηγετο, και πάντας τοὺς αὐτῇ πλησιάσαντας ἠφάνιζε). How Leipephile fits into such a context we cannot tell, though it is easy enough to guess. Her name is known to Hesiod: it was therefore not originally a nomen ex facto, a nickname given because she "left her lovers"; but an Euphorion may, for his own purpose, have chosen so to interpret her name—though no such interpretation is necessary, if the story of Actor's courting of Leipephile was in itself a record of a disastrous suit.

But I admit that I leave this part almost, if not quite, as obscure as I found it.

V. 5. At the end of the line, ἀγκάσσατο (suggested to me by Mr. Lobel) is almost entirely legible in the photograph. αὐτὴ ἔλοιτο ed. pr., ἀγκὰς ἔλοιτο Latte: in both, ἔλοιτο should be ἔλοι.

V. 7. ΠΟΔΙΚΡΑΤΕΟΙΤΕ . . Ε . . . is the reading of the text. (ἀ)πο δικρατεί τάμοι ἔγχει Latte: but ἀποτέμνειν τινά is not a convincing phrase here, and the α and ο of τάμοι are hardly to be reconciled with the traces in the text. Read ποδὶ κροτέοι τε[θν]ε[ῶτα] (κροτέοι Lobel) "stamp your corpse with her foot." For the sense and construction of κροτέω cf. Eur. Ba. 188 γῆν θύρωσι κροτέϊν.

V. 8. ἡ ν[ύ]το[ι] (Latte) is definitely too long for the space. ν[έ]ον] (Lobel) is clearly best. At the end of the line, Lobel's ᾧ κ[υνάπαι]δες fits the traces very well, and is indeed mostly legible (the π in the middle is far more probable than ν, otherwise κυνάπαιδες might seem the preferable reading. For κυνάπαιδες, see Norsa-Vitelli in Stud. It. Fil. x. 121, 249.)

V. 9. ἡ δ' [ῶ]τε] ed. pr. and Latte. But the δ is almost certainly κ, and ορε is too long for the gap. Read ἡ, κ[αί] "she spoke, and . . ."

V. 13. α[.]ορδ[.]ν seems certain. Unless ἀφόρδιον is relevant, no known word seems to fit. I can only suggest ἀ[μ]ορδ[ή]ν. ἀμορδή, "deprivation," related to ἀμέρδομαι as πορδή το πέρδομαι. For the rhythm cf. (a) 2, 11 above, γυναικῶν ἐμπελάτειρα.

Latte's view, that the poet is saying "the dolphins did not rescue her," seems to me improbable. The connexion of vv. 13-14 is very obscure. It is likely enough that αὔθις . . . αὔθι δὲ . . . are co-ordinated: but the evidence fails us here altogether. (Perhaps the sense was: "dolphins rescued her, so we may sing again (or hereafter) the escape of Apriate from the sea, and sing again (or hereafter) the fate of Trambelus, etc.")

V. 21. τὸ γρήιον, τι γρήιον, τε γρήιον edd. The first iota is certain. The word is, as Lobel first printed it, τιγρήιον:

this piece was written soon after the first tiger was brought to Alexandria.

Vv. 24-25. The transitive use of ἀγρηγορέω occurs nowhere else, but is unavoidable here. The sense is "who treat with arrogance their feeble parents, having dismissed with scorn (στυξάρες : edd. ignore the tense) the advice of the living and the dead."—The advice of the living and the dead is the wise counsel of present and past poets and moralizers, who exhort men to love and respect their parents. [There can be no truth in a view which equates the "living and dead" with the parents of v. 24 : for (1) it cannot be done grammatically, (2) the parents are not dead (v. 24, they are feeble, but still alive), (3) what advice do dead parents give ?]

the hopes of my life are broken, my house rings hollow. The lot of prosperity falls now to one man, now to another ; the way of wealth is as the way of dice—dice bring in turn a lucky throw to-day to one, to-morrow to another, and swiftly make the poor man rich, and the rich man poor. Even thus on wheeling wings prosperity goes up and down among men, and makes first one thrive and then another. I myself, whom you behold, have proffered drink and food to many, for of old I was no outcast : fields of deep corn were mine, and a threshing floor, and many sheep : this fatal famine has made havoc of them all, and I—uncared for, vagabond—creep thus about the crowded city . . .

end, Pan makes himself a new flute with wax from an oak-tree. Dionysus and perhaps Bacchanals are present. One of the latter tries the pipe in vain; she throws it aside, but Pan picks it up and plays on it.

Evidently Dionysus has engaged Pan to play at a contest (v. 4 χορῶν ἐπ' ἀγῶνας refers to a definite competition). The Satyrs, led by Silenus, have stolen Pan's pipe; Dionysus will therefore be enraged against Pan (vv. 20 sqq.). Pan makes himself a new one, but has difficulty in commanding it to any utterance of harmony. Doubtless Pan triumphed over the Satyrs in the end.

It is probable that Vergil's Sixth Eclogue (vv. 13 sqq.) is based upon this poem, or upon a common ancestor.

Now seeing him, thus cheerfully spoke Silenus^a unabashed.—“Tell me, great lord of shepherds, how could a warrior steadfast follow into battle without a shield? How then come you to the dancing-match without your pipe? Where is your lute gone, shepherd, where your lyre? Where the wide fame of your songs, that delight even the ear of Zeus? Did they steal your pipe upon the hills while you slept after feasting without limit, Daphnis the cowherd or Lycidas or Thyrsis? Amyntichus or Menalcas?—For those young men your heart is set afire. Or have you given it for a wedding gift to a nymph upon the mountains?—your heart flies ever beneath the wings of Love; and everywhere it is your wedding-day, concise and forceful, with some imaginative touches and obvious avoidance of the monotony to which the theme naturally lends itself: the style and technique are not dissimilar to Vergil's in the Georgics. There seems to be no reason to deny to this fragment an Hellenistic date: but it is possible that is much later.

. . . for she feels the advance of the River: if it should fail, through her long roots she draws—as if by conscious reasoning—more water, and thereafter produces abundant fruits. But never will men be watching and waiting in need to seize the fruit of the full-grown cyclamen; for great is the flood of Nile, and great the Abundance that is spread over the corn, and smiles, and brings fertility; the fruits thereof go forth to every land. This is an immemorial law, surviving still from our lords of old:—to set those trees ^a side by side upon hills, to bind the watery mound and ward famine off.

does the discussion of cyclamen and persea. Perhaps these trees (perhaps the ἀκανθα, Housman ap. Hunt) had been mentioned already in connexion with the cyclamen, one kind of which grew especially ὑπὸ τὰ δένδρα, Dioscor. ii. 193-194. More probably the lines are simply misplaced (Beazley).

It is not, I think, to be supposed that these stanzas compose together a single complete poem, nor yet that each stanza was intended to be an entirely separate song. Though each stanza, sung in its turn, is in fact more or less self-contained and independent, yet all are connected and bound together by the occasion on which they are recited and by a common subject-matter—the philosophic toper's Design for Living. The work is thus something less than a single complete poem, and something more than a series of independent songs. Cf. the Harmodius and Aristogiton songs in Athenaeus's collection of Attic scolia.

Fragment of a poem about Hero and Leander, the earliest appearance of that story in Greek literature (where it was hitherto known first from Musaeus in the 5th century A.D.). Is this the Hellenistic poem which scholars postulate as the common source of Ovid, Heroides 17, 18 and Musaeus? The fragment is too meagre to permit a certain conclusion. Hardly more than two dozen words are more or less com-

(The Plate makes it clear, I think, that γένοισθε v. 2, και ἀστ[v. 6 come after the feminine caesura in the third foot of their lines ; not, as seemed likely at first, after the similar caesura in the fourth foot.) The two vocatives Ἔσπερε v. 5 and Λάα]νδρε v. 6 are not easy to combine, but may of course have been wholly free from objection in the original text.

Our poet has in common with Musaeus (1) the word τηλεσκόπος v. 10, Mus. 237, (2) the address to Leander in the Panocrates of Alexandria, an acquaintance of Athenaeus, suggested to the emperor Hadrian that a certain lotus should be named after his favourite Antinous; averring that it had sprung from the blood of a lion which the emperor had killed near Alexandria. Hadrian approved the conceit, and rewarded Panocrates. Athenaeus (xv. 677 d-f) quotes four lines from the poem which Panocrates wrote:—

οὐλὴν ἔρπυλλον λευκὸν κρίνον ἢδ' ὑάκινθον
πορφυρέην γλαύκου τε χελιδονίοιο πέτηλα

Our fragment, in which the slaying of a lion by Hadrian and Antinous is described, presumably comes from the same poem. It is a poor enough composition; exaggeration ruins the realism at which it aims. A stale and conventional lion does everything at once—except move: we cry to him “Fellow, leave thy damnable mouthings, and begin!”

That Hadrian was an experienced hunter of lions, we knew already. The commonest method was to drive the beast into a net; pits and poisons were probably only employed by those whose purpose was to take the lion alive (for the amphitheatre) or merely to destroy it as a danger to life and property. Frontal attack, whether on horseback as here or on foot as in Oppian, Cyn. ii. 474-478, was too dangerous a method to be employed by any but the boldest or those who had no alternative in a chance encounter. See further Butler, Sport in Classic Times (1930), 88-97.

On such a horse Antinous awaited the manslaying lion ; in his left hand he held the bridle-rein, in his right a spear tipped with adamant. Hadrian was first to shoot forth his bronze spear ; he wounded, but slew it not, for it was his intent to miss the animal, wishing to test to the full how straight the other aimed—he, lovely Antinous, son of the slayer of Argus.^b Stricken, the beast was yet more aroused ; with his paws he tore the rough ground in anger ; forth rose a cloud of dust, and dimmed the sunlight. He raged like a wave of the surging sea, when the West wind is awakened after the wind from Strymon.^c Lightly upon both he leapt, and scourged his haunches and sides with his tail, with his own dark whip. . . . His eyes flashed dreadful fire beneath the brows ; he sent forth a shower of foam from his ravening jaws to the ground, while his fangs gnashed within. From his massive head and shaggy neck the mane rose and quivered ; from his other limbs it fell bushy as trees ; on his back it was . . . like whetted spear points. In such guise he went against the glorious God and Antinous, like Typhoeus of old against Zeus the Giant-Killer. . . .

Where our fragment begins, the countryside is by a sudden miracle rendered waste and desert. Lycurgus is terrified. Dionysus appears and assails him with thunder and lightning. Maenads and Satyrs assault his person, and Dionysus distracts his soul with madness. Lycurgus fights against imaginary serpents: believes that his sons, Astacius and Ardys, are serpents, and so destroys them. His wife Cytis is rescued by Dionysus, on the ground that she had always attempted to check her husband in his career of wickedness. Lycurgus regains his senses : but his punishment has yet hardly begun. He is bound with vines and conveyed to the underworld, where he must perpetually attempt to fill with water a leaking vessel. The last few lines, which were left unfinished, were meant to be an epilogue. They seem to contain a reference to a Dionysiac ceremony : so that our poem may be a cult-hymn intended for recitation at a particular festival.

The treatment of the story is to a great extent dependent upon older epic and tragic poetry : new to us are the punishment of Lycurgus in the underworld, and a few details such as the names of his wife and children. Language and metre (e.g. $\tau\acute{\iota}\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$ twice) forbid us to consider the attribution of the piece to an era earlier than the 3rd century A.D.

Where a meadow was before, close came Lycurgus, heart-stricken with mighty fear and speechlessness. For irresistibly, beyond mortal defence, all their works were upset and turned about before their eyes. But when Lycurgus knew him for the glorious son of Zeus, pale terror fell upon his spirit ; the ox-goad, wherewith he had been at labour smiting, fell from his hand before his feet. He had no will to utter or to ask a word. Now might that poor wretch have escaped his gloomy fate : but he besought not then the divinity to abate his wrath. In his heart he foresaw that doom was nigh to him, when he saw Dionysus come to assail him amid lightings that flashed manifold with repeated thunderclaps, while Zeus did great honour to his son's destructive deeds.

So Dionysus urged his ministers, and they together sped against Lycurgus and scourged him with rods of foliage. Unflinching he stood, like a rock that juts into the marble sea and groans when a wind arises and blows, and abides the smiting of the seas : even so abode Lycurgus steadfast, and recked not of their smiting. But ever more unceasing wrath went deep into the heart of Thyone's son : he was minded not at all to take his victim with a sudden death, but rather to break him under a lengthy doom, that still alive he might repay a grievous penalty. He sent madness upon him, and spread about the phantom shapes of serpents, that he might spend the time fending them away, till baneful Rumour of his madness should arrive at Thebes on wings and summon Ardys and Astacius, his two sons, and Cytis who married him and was subdued to his embrace.

They, when led by Rumour's many tongues they came, found Lycurgus just now released from suffering, worn out by madness. They cast their arms around him as he lay in the dust—fools ! they were destined to perish at their father's hand before their mother's eyes ! For not long after, madness, at the command of Dionysus, aroused Lycurgus yet again with real frenzy. He thought that he was smiting serpents ; but they were his children from whom he stole the spirit forth. And now would Cytis have fallen about them : but in compassion Dionysus snatched her forth and set her beyond the reach of doom, because she had warned her lord constantly in his storms of evil passion. Yet she could not persuade her master, too stubborn ; he, when his sudden madness was undone, recognized the god through experience of suffering. Still Dionysus abated not his wrath : as Lycurgus stood unflinching, yet frenzied by distress, the god spread vines about him and fettered all his limbs. His neck and both ankles imprisoned, he suffered the most pitiable doom of all men on earth : and now in ^a the land of Sinners his phantom endures that endless labour—drawing water into a broken pitcher : the stream is poured forth into Hades.

Such is the penalty which the loud-thundering son of Cronus ordained for men that fight against the gods ; that retribution may pursue them both living and again in death. . . .

These conventional and uninspired verses are described at the foot and in the left-hand margin (opposite vv. 8-9) as 'Ερμού 'Εγκώμιον: but in both places the name 'Ερμού has been obliterated, and higher up in the left-hand margin (opposite vv. 4-5) the same hand has written εἰς τὸν ἄρχοντα. It is clear that the poem, though it devotes its first nine lines to Hermes, is essentially a panegyric of one Theon, who appears to have made a benefaction to his community. Evidently Theon, who had previously supplied oil for the men's gymnasium, has now supplied it for the boys' also. "Probably . . . Theon was a young man whose wealth had led to his early appointment to the office of gymnasiarch" (ed. pr., after Wilamowitz).

In vv. 6-7, 10, 19 there are interlinear improvements on the text. These are not corrections of misprints, but deliberate alterations made, probably, by the author himself. It is not likely that such a poem was often republished: probably our text is the author's copy, incorporating his own δεύτεραι φροντίδες.

WITH your own lips, Hermes, hasten to sing to me about your young interpreter^a: assist the minstrel, let your fingers strike the seven strings of the tuneful lyre, which your own hands first fashioned, when you were new-dropped at your mother's feet; and you gave it to Apollo in ransom for his oxen. Therefore do latter-day minstrels celebrate your service of the Muse, and herdsmen in the fields proclaim you Pastoral God, and athletes in the Stadium call you Hermes, Governor of the Games,^b and cities hymn you as Guardian of their Gymnasiums. Here this youth also, great master, honours you among your hallowed people in pouring forth a fountain of oil for our townfolk. It is not lately that we knew you first, Theon, holding high office among your youth-

^a Theon was evidently a man of literary tastes (cf. the end of the poem): hence "interpreter of H." (who invented the lyre). ^b ἐναγώνιος Ἐρμῆς Pind. P. ii. 10, N. x. 52-53.

It is natural to suppose that the iambs are part of a preface to the hexameters, cf. the Epicedion on the Professor at Berytus below: but this is by no means certain, v. Körte, loc. cit. p. 225.

The iambs: the subject had been ordered to represent his city at Rome (v. 14 ἐν Ἰταλοῖς, v. 17 παρ' Ἰταλοῖσι). His appointment was a compliment to his intelligence, his talent for oratory and his perseverance. He impressed his superiors by the celerity of his journey to Rome; and we may safely conjecture that he was not unsuccessful in his mission. The first five lines remain obscure,—on his way to Rome he arrived at some country where he was welcome, and where he engaged in a military campaign at the request of the local government.

The hexameters : Maximus is applauded because he did not forget his city and succumb to the temptation to stay in the capital, as many had done in the past. He is described as “leader of the Tyrians and their neighbours,” and his services to Anatolian cities are commemorated. Probably this poem was composed in Tyre, and Tyre is the city which entrusted Maximus with his mission to the capital (v. 12).

Since (in the iambs) the central imperial court is evidently still in Italy, the composition is to be dated before the end of the 3rd century A.D.

The first five lines refer to part of Telephus's adventures, and describe how nearly he destroyed the Achaeans when they mistook their way to Troy and landed at Mysia. The speaker (of v. 8 sqq., and doubtless of the preceding seven lines too) is a Trojan (v. 9) woman (v. 14 ed. pr., ἀνθή): perhaps Astyoche, mother of Telephus. She prays for a treaty between Trojans and Achaeans. From this prayer (esp. v. 11) it seems certain that the Trojan war has already begun, and that the allusion to the adventures of Telephus is retrospective: prayer for a treaty between Trojans and Achaeans would be irrelevant in the course of the war of Telephus and his Mysians against the Achaeans. An obvious possibility is the story of Eurypylus, the son of Telephus, defeated in single combat at Troy by Neoptolemus (see p. 17 for the story): fear for her son's fate would be sufficient reason for the anxiety of Astyoche, and her prayer for heaven-sent peace. But there are doubtless other possibilities: and the problem is complicated by the verso of this papyrus, which contains fragments of 22 hexameters—probably belonging to the same speech—dealing with the dangers of travel by sea. (See further Robert, ap. ed. pr.)

The date of composition is uncertain. But there is nothing Alexandrian in the style, and the ascription to the 3rd century A.D. is probable enough. The poem may then be the work of a writer who represents that tradition which reached its

Three men (Thrasius, Prothous and Pylaon) slay a stag and skin it at the command of a fourth (Bombus). They dress the corpse of an enemy (Modaeus) in the skin. A woman (whose name may be concealed in the end of v. 9) awakens Dionysus. He approaches the four men, and decrees that the corpse shall be eaten by its compatriots. He leaps into the midst of his enemies' army, and tells their leader, Deriades, that they shall not escape unless they rend an animal apart and eat its flesh raw. Therefore he offers them the corpse dressed in a stag-skin. Deriades, whose men fall eagerly upon it, says that he would rather eat the flesh of Dionysus. [For the matter of numerous other small fragments belonging to our II, see esp. Wilamowitz, l.c.]

As it^a leapt through, Prothous and Pylaon and Thrasius came upon it at the call of Bombus and slew it: they flayed it, and stripping off the skin, arrayed the wretched man from head and shoulders down. The new-flayed hide clave to his body, moulded to the flesh; above, the horns gleamed to be seen afar; to one that beheld him, he wanted nothing of the wild beast's form. Thus did they set a counterfeited animal upon a man.

Now she, . . ., came with furious cries to the deep-winged^b tent of Methymna's god.^c And him she found lying in his bed . . .; her master marked her not as she came close; but she rushed forward and seized him by the hair behind. Then up he leapt, and jumped from his bed like a colt at a violent whistling . . . pours forth . . . in the guise of an oxherd. . . . Straightway the Bacchanal god set forth, and he observed them—strong Bombus and Prothous and Pylaon and Thrasius—stretch the covering upon Modaeus, and sacred fillets on his head of twisted wool, which they call . . . god stayed them, and spoke in distress: "Delay no longer at your task, idly standing, nor by the altar of the gods . . . but we will give him up to be the spoil and prey of our enemies, that he may be (devoured) by his own comrades." He spoke, and leapt into the midst of the army, where most of all the Cethaeans were rushing to the flame of battle. There stood he, and cried aloud to Deriades and the rest: "Slaves of women, Indians, consider now this way: to Deriades above all I speak this of my knowledge:—You shall not, in your present straits, withstand the onslaught of the gleaming wine^a and escape your evil fate, before in the swift night you tear apart the raw flesh of a living animal and eat it. This tall stag straight of horn, the finest that followed us from holy Hellas, a marvel to behold,—come, hasten to rend it in good conflict for its flesh. And when this night gives birth to brightness, straightway let us cast the animal's remains into silver coffers, that they may be removed under the beaming sunshine." He spoke; and they of their own accord were fain to fall upon human flesh, and to appease their boundless desire, smitten by eager madness. And then Deriades answered the son of Zeus and spoke: "Would that I might cut your body limb from limb: to swallow it raw. . . ."

The fragment opens at the conclusion of a fiery speech. Soldiers are stirred to frenzy and fly to arms. Their infinite numbers are related. The news spreads rapidly throughout the world.

This is an era when the Roman Empire stands under four masters. Two of them, Diocletian and Galerius, are about to begin a war with Persia. The other two would have rushed to their assistance, had not one (Constantius Chlorus) been busy in Britain, the other (Maximian) engaged in Spain (of which fact this fragment is our first evidence: but we knew that in 296 he was fighting the Germans on the Rhine, in 297 the Moors in Africa; perhaps he went to Africa through Spain, driving the Moors before him).

The correct language and metre of this competent but unexciting piece suggest an Alexandrian model: for which v. ed. pr. p. 51 n. 3. The poem is representative of a common literary genre:—the hymn in celebration of a general's victories. Cumont compares the poems written in honour of the campaigns of Constantine (Julian, Or. i. p. 2 d) and of Julian (Zosimus iii. 2. 4).

“ . . . it is my will.” They, maddened by Enyo's lash, all girded on their quivers full of arrows, each armed his hand with bow and spear, and all the Nesaeon^a cavalry that fights upon the plain assembled,—no fraction^b of their number speeding across the sea did Nereus ever bring of old on floating rafts. Not such as the Persian arms that rang beneath the Spartan host in the narrow cleft of Thermopylae,^c—not such the numbers that advanced to meet my kings, but greater far, and stung by the battle cry. . . .

elements, and (where our fragment begins) creates of himself a second god, Hermes, to perform this task.

Hermes brings to an end the conflict of the elements, and creates out of them the sky with its planets and constellations, and the earth with its rivers and seas.

The gap after v. 41 is probably quite a small one. In the interval, Hermes decided that Life must be created : and that he will then transform himself into the sun.

When the fragment begins again, Hermes is looking for a place where he may set life down when he has created it. He determines to build a city. In the fragments which follow, he decides (at some length) against the extremes of north and south.

In the end, of course, his choice fell upon Egypt (traditionally—even among the Greeks—the first part of the world to be inhabited by men).

Bidez, loc. cit., plausibly suggests that these fragments are from the introduction to a lengthy encyclopaedic poem, of which the ultimate purpose is the narration of the historical founding of a particular city. The attribution of the poem (and of the previous one: they probably proceed from the same hand) to Soterichus is very speculative.

. . . having drawn forth a portion of his manifold power^a: that is the Hermes of my fathers in his youth. To him he gave full many a command, to make an Universe of fairest Order, and gave him a golden wand, his regulator, wise parent of every serviceable art. With this the son of Zeus went forth to accomplish all his father's bidding; Zeus sat on a place of vantage, and rejoiced as he beheld the works of his illustrious son. He, clad in wondrous fourfold shape,^b closed his eyes^c. . . over the brightness . . . and spoke:—"Hearken . . . of air . . . (Zeus) himself bids the elements cease their former strife. Obey the word of God, and fall apart! Hereafter you shall come together in better sort: for I will create mutual friendship and love among you in your day of separation, towards a better destiny." So he spoke, and with his golden wand he touched . . . and quietude and peace at once prevailed over all the elements, and they ceased . . . and straightway stood each in his appointed place, the gleam . . . united, they forgot their immemorial conflict. Now

^b This mystical expression means that Hermes represented each of the four elements in himself. ^c When Hermes closes his eyes, darkness falls upon the universe; when he opens them, light (so the Egyptian Thot, with whom H. is identified here. Cf. Homer, Od. v. 47: Hermes has a staff with which he can open or close the eyes of men).

Ed. pr. *Roberts, Catalogue of the Greek Papyri in the John Rylands Library, Manchester, iii. 1938, no. 487, p. 100.

This fragment is almost (v. P. Oxy. no. 1821) unique, inasmuch as it treats a theme taken directly from the Odyssey. Probably Odysseus is relating the adventures of himself and his friends in the first two lines: he is perhaps speaking to Laertes or to Eumaeus (cf. μάκελλαν, βῶλωι at the ends of lines verso 13, 15: so ed. pr., but from v. 6 Philoetius seems as likely a candidate). Vv. 3 sqq., Odysseus convinces somebody (perhaps Philoetius, probably not Eurycleia) of his identity by revealing the scar on his thigh. He reassures

Like some details of the story, the words and phases are sometimes independent of their model: e.g. ἵκελα vv. 2, 11, here only adverbial; ἀθλήματα here only in epic poetry, and with this sense; the sense of πᾶν in v. 6. Apart from these differences the style, metre and vocabulary are fairly conventional. This is the work of a competent poet, whom we may tentatively assign to the 3rd century A.D., thus placing him in the tradition of which Quintus of Smyrna is the most celebrated representative, and from which the school of Nonnus made so violent a reaction.

EPICEDEION FOR A PROFESSOR OF THE UNIVERSITY OF BERYTUS [4 A.D.]

vv. 22-24 are abbreviated to two lines). In vv. 1-12, 10-12 are written in the margin; not in the text, which may therefore also be a stereotype, to which vv. 10-12 could be added at will if appropriate (i.e. in the case of an ex-professor).

The dead professor was a native of Smyrna, and held his appointment at Berytus. He went to Constantinople on private business, and died just when he was about to be appointed professor there. Thus the poem affords a brief insight into the famous School at Berytus in the middle of the 4th century. We learn that the pupils studied (among other subjects) Attic comedy; Plato; Demosthenes; Thucydides; Homer. And at first sight we are impressed by the affection of the class for its teacher, and its remarkable esprit de corps. But closer scrutiny reveals the artificiality of the piece and the formality which it implies. The class of students is clearly highly organized, especially for such business as this. And we may doubt whether all the virtues ascribed to the professor in his obituary were acknowledged in him in his lifetime. The sentiments of praise are indeed empty; it is not easy to discern profound affection or even respect underlying the commonplace expressions. And the portrait which the grateful pupils had painted was not a singular token of esteem for an individual; as much was done for the subject of the second Epicedeion, and we shall not be surprised to find it proven of yet others, if further compositions of this kind are unearthed. Only in one respect, perhaps, may we detect a difference: this prooimion is extended (in comparison with the second one) by several lines which quote Demosthenes and Thucydides in a somewhat precise and pedantic manner; it is possible that these lines were added here in mimicry of some quaint mannerism of an individual.

Schemmel's article on the School at Berytus is relevant and interesting (I paraphrase a section of his admirable work) :—

“ The life of students [in the Eastern schools] was nowhere creditable to them. But of all universities, the lowest reputation was enjoyed by Berytus. Our sources are unanimous in praise of the beauty of the city, and in admiration of its magnificent buildings and brilliant festivals, no less than of the refinement and culture of its inhabitants : but they are equally unanimous in censure of its luxury and vice. . . . The student had 1-2 hours of classes ; then came bath and breakfast, where he gambled with dice ; he was expected to visit the theatre daily to see the latest mime ; in the evening there were drinking-parties in the company of courtesans. He participated eagerly in the numerous festivals of the city, e.g. races and animal-fights. Temptation was great, and the Christian therefore took the precaution to postpone baptism until his studies were over : he considered that baptism washed away all previous sins, whereas for sins committed after baptism there could be no atonement.”

Berytus was almost entirely destroyed by an earthquake in A.D. 554.

. . . we shall grieve, no longer seeing him here, the master of our Theatre, the Teacher without whom no meeting ever yet occurred, and for whose sake we assembled hither so many times. None of you would gladly or willingly be listening to any other programme, if I were not speaking to honour this departed soul, as he often spoke to honour others ; for he was an able orator. Do you not remember how, a little while ago, chosen to turn another way . . . ?

Now I must praise the circle of his pupils for courtesy toward their teacher. Unable to look upon him otherwise, they have set up his image in two portraits—one made by the sons of painters, the other naturally drawn in the mind of each. And now I will dedicate this third portrait, breathing and articulate, not by melting wax but by speaking words. If, conquered by our calamity, I seem to fall often into excess of praise while honouring him, let none look askance upon me. “No malice can be,” says Demosthenes (taking it from the ancient chronicler), “from the still living to the dead.” And now I have made an end of Comedy’s iambics: for the rest, I shall wheel on to the stage my Heroic verse.

Through him you gained wondrous glory, for his sake alone your pride used to be great, though he dwelt in the Orient, on foreign soil: because of him, all men still called you Mother of Noblest Sons.

For three most illustrious sons were born of you; one a singer, two glorious orators. One was the dear son of the fair stream of Meles, the herald of immortals and men, divine Homer, who set Ilium before the

Yet all this kept not evil doom from him, nor availed the broad flood of his speech to avert relentless unsmiling Fate ; the brazen doom of death laid him to sleep in the land of the new-born Rome of Constantine. The city of the king mourned in sorrow when she saw him dead, and all the streets were a flood of lamentation—such the clear voice that was silenced : whose widespread glory she had heard ever from afar, and yearned to hear it speaking near by, and was about to hear. Himself he had gone to Thrace to accomplish his own need ; and after it, the holy city wished to induce him to stay there to be shepherd of her youthful flocks, the gentle sons of those noblemen who dwell in her and glorify so many men with countless dignities in Chairs of Honour. But these things came not to pass : so, seeing his corpse, Rome, that never wept before, wept then ; her groans were heard by the sea-coasts of Thrace, smitten unendingly by blows of breakers from the ocean that dashed high beside the shore of rapid Hellespont.

LITERARY POPYRI

(a) The poem opens with a prologue in comic iambic trimeters (cf. pp. 552, 554). The six lines of this probably represent only a fragment of the original composition. (On the topic of these prologues see ed. pr. pp. 8-10, corrected and modified by Schissel, loc. cit.) The theme of the poem is announced in the fifth line of the preface. It is "to sing of the hours and tell of their actions"; that is, to describe the successive stages of a single day and the activities of country life appropriate to each stage. It is in general a peculiar sort of bucolic idyll:—the events of a single day described against a background of the changes of weather; which strikes a fairly impressive undertone of the struggle between light and dark, between storm and sunshine. The season is early winter, in November (see Maas, Byz. Zeitschr. 1934, p. 76).

An introductory passage, 9-26, blends with the beginning of the theme. Against a background of a storm the poet tells of a shepherd in the early morning driving his herds to shelter. Rain is pouring already, and he expects a hailstorm; he takes cover beneath a cliff, and plays his pipe (27-38).

The scene then shifts when the storm breaks and attacks the Tree-Nymphs, scattering their twigs and foliage and swelling the streams around them (39-48).

Then the storm begins to clear. The sun gradually breaks through, and the world rejoices in light and warmth. The snow melts and floods the springs and streams. A Tree-Nymph addresses a Spring-Nymph with good humour:—"I am already drenched by the storm; the work of your swollen streams is superfluous; reserve your energies against the time of summer heat, when they will be very welcome" (49-85).

The events of the day in the sunlit afternoon are next described. The countryfolk gather to honour Demeter with song and dance and sacrifice. Then they return to their proper tasks: the ploughman and sower are working in the fields, hedges are built, and the birds are scared from the seed. And a farmer sings of the coming harvest. His melody is repeated by a maid tending her flocks at eventide; she dries her hair and clothes still drenched by the storm of the morning (86-139).

The sun goes down, and a violent thunderstorm gathers in the twilight; here the proper theme of the poem closes (140-150).

There follow six lines of epilogue in which the poet begs the favour of his audience and announces that he has been summoned to Cyrene (151-end).

In general we may say of this poem that its theme and structure are well-planned and highly poetical; but the composition itself is weak and vicious. The writer is of the school of Nonnus, to whom he owes his excessive ornament and fullness of description, his strained and too ingenious phraseology, erotic colouring, monotonous rhythms, and inclination to grotesque allegory. Vv. 144-148, in which the sentimental may seem to find a touch of true tenderness, are in fact a conventional copy of an outworn tradition, and a vulgar appeal to susceptible emotions. The poem is carefully, indeed laboriously, written by a person eager above all to impress an audience with his cleverness; in that limited ambition he cannot fairly be said to have failed.

The structure of the piece, which we praised so highly, was not altogether the invention of this author. It follows the rules of a recognized literary type, the ἐκφρασις συνεζευγμένη, defined by Aphthonius (37, 17): συνεζευγμένα δὲ ὡς αἱ πράγματα καὶ καιροῦς ἅμα συνάπτουσαι.

(b) This is a fragment of a poem in honour of one Patricius Theagenes, perhaps composed by the author of the previous piece (ed. pr. supplements its title as τοῦ αὐτοῦ] εἰς τὸν Πατρικ[ιον Θε]αγενῆ Ἰχθ[ύονος). There is no doubt that it is only a fragment of a complete poem, not a beginning left unfinished by its author; for our papyrus is a portion of a published book, not a writer's rough and incomplete autograph. (See Schissel, loc. cit., against ed. pr. p. 18.) We do not know, but may provisionally assume, that the poem in its fullness obeyed the strict rules which used to govern this kind of composition (for which see Buecheler, Rh. Mus. N.F. xxx. 1878, 57, 73; Reichel, Quaest. Progymnast. 1909, 89). It is, as it should be, a direct address to the object of its eulogy; it begins conventionally with an account of Theagenes' immensely distinguished ancestry, and probably went on to describe next his ἀνατροφή, then his πράξεις, ending at last with a σύγκρισις.

Theagenes is identified by the first editor with the Athenian archon of that name who, according to Suidas and Photius, was a wealthy and ambitious politician of good family and varied service to the state. He lived in the second half of the 5th century A.D.

This identification is reasonably certain; that of the poet himself is not. He is alleged by the first editor to be one Pamprepius of Panopolis (biography by Asmus, Byz. Zeitschr. xxii. 1913, 320), a pagan Egyptian poet born in the year A.D. 448, who came to Athens and lived there under the patronage of Theagenes. Later he quarrelled with his patron and departed to Constantinople, where he became a crafty diplomat; a favourite at the court of Zenon; executed for treason in an Isaurian fortress, A.D. 488.

Now (assuming that both poems are the work of one author) ed. pr. legitimately infers (1) from (a) 155 sqq., that the poet had connexions with Egypt; (2) from (a) 86-100, where Demeter's relation to Athens and Attica are broadly underlined, that the scene of the poem's recitation is Athens; further (b) was certainly recited at Athens; (3) from the tone of (b) 4, that the poet was a pagan, as was also probably Theagenes; (4) from (b) as a whole, that he stood in some close personal relation to Theagenes.

It is therefore clear that the evidence of the poems is in no way at variance with anything we know of the career of Pamprepius. But it is equally clear that Theagenes may have protected a score of other persons, whose names are lost, whom the evidence might fit just as well. Any such person would of course have recited at Athens, would have been a pagan, and might very well have been summoned to Cyrene (which is all that is proved by (a) 153).

We therefore concur with Schissel, who properly criticizes the first editor for entitling his book Pamprepius von Panopolis, as if there were no difference between a certainty and a possible hypothesis.

(a) . . . The audience must be friendly to my song. When the words come together ^a . . . they draw the poet's subtle mind discreetly with them, they lead him on to have the courage to sing the hours and tell their deeds, however anxiety may distract him.

To-day a revel ^b is ringing round about me, not of

She was not destined long to support the rainy surge, nor long the wet veil of snow that bound her head. For already a circle appeared amid the clouds, red about its rim, and a thin gleam grew, pasturing so much of the space as the clouds hold off,^b and opened a path back into the sky. The light of the sun shone first like the glow of the ox-eyed moon, then soaring it blazed, routing the shores and hills with arrows of light. Hard it must fight to scatter the mist that rolled around on high, the rayless mother of the frost. There was laughter in all the land, and peace smiled again. The sun filled the air and ocean with a fiery brilliance, and made them warm. The dolphin leapt up, half-seen by ships, with splashes in the air as it rowed across the sea. Nymphs girt their breasts with the brightness^c that fought against the snow and made the world to flourish. The nature of hail was changed to a showery stream. Snow was shaken to the ground, vanquished by the light ; forced by fair weather it flowed away in myriad changeful tears declining battle with the brightness. The sinews of the springs roared loud, hard-pressed by the snowfloods of the heavenly outpour ; their breasts were taut with the streams. And from its bed the stream arose and turned again, back to where the nymphs, coeval with the trees, were rooted in the depths of the pinewood.

There spoke an Hamadryad, peeping forth from the foliage, to her rosy-armed neighbour, a fountain-nymph : " Good morrow, dear daughter of father Ocean, queen of the Plantation ! How should I need your streams, laden as I am with the bounty of the black-breasted clouds ? Do you not see how great a shower, poured upon my bushes, drips down from within my tresses ?—That is why you have so deep a flood, my dear ! Why am I aroused to speak ? Because speech touches to the heart, and thereafter plans are better formed. For that time is near, when the dog-star burns : then will be the season when your bounties are helpful—then, lady, spread your Already the steeds of Phaethon, beating the path of heaven beneath their hooves, were drawing the dew-moist rail of their twilight chariot toward their drinking-pool in the western sea. And again the cloud-mists were gathering in the sky, rising from earth, and all the deep-rooted stars were hidden, and the moon was seen no more. A great thunderstorm was speeding on high, fiercely rushing, and a torch leapt from the clouds as they burst on either side and mingled one with another. A father lifted upon his lap his infant child, and put his hands upon its ears, that it might not hear the crash of cloud bursting on cloud above. The heavens rang loud. A little maiden too, in trailing robe, was aroused and called her nurse. Earth yielded the fruits of her teeming flanks, and committed her children to the sky and clouds.

stretch to sing your radiance? Your fatherland first I will pass by. Your Athens is beyond a poet's flow of praise; for there bright Apollo the prophet hung up his lyre and bow and divine shoot of laurel. But I keep an ampler song for Athens after this one, since you have charged me with your heart's desire, that is the mover of melodious song.

Now I am inspired to sing of your descent. But I fear to voice it, for your nobility obscures my song.^a If I were hymning in tuneful melody some other honoured and famous man, my song would perhaps compare him with noble heroes of Hellas rich in famous deeds. But singing you I sing all Hellas, and know not whom among her heroes I may summon to play this part.^b Aeacus I will call you: you carry the blood of Telamon. I name you Cecrops, and speak of you as divine Erechtheus: you are the latest descendant of both. I will call you Nestor: you bear the blood of Nestor. I might call you Lapith Caineus . . . If you desire, I will lift the veil from your remotest ancestry : Earth teemed of old and bore a son Azeius, who grew to manhood amid the mighty battles of the Titans. Giant Azeius encountered a nymph with lover's intent, and begot Lycon ; and hero Lycon loved a fair maiden Deianeira. Now Pelasgus of old went up to the fair couch of Deianeira when she was growing to womanhood ; he was the dear son of Zeus the god of Freedom ; and from her bed he got Lycaon, shepherd of the land of Arcadia. . . .

random from Homeric catalogues : with the subtle implication that Germanus is another Achilles (cf. ἠηξήνωρ v. 48, in Homer of Achilles only). The events however are certainly historical. The Blemyan wars occurred at the end of the 4th century A.D., and this poem was written in the same era. Homeric hexameters of the school of Quintus Smyrnaeus.

IN his right hand brandishing his far-shadowing spear he smote him in the belly : therein the bronze was driven . . . his shield of curious device he cast upon the ground, and himself dropped supine in the dust : he reeled beneath the blow of bronze, and his entrails leapt from his belly and flowed down upon the earth. Persinous slew Dolius and strong Pylartes, and Phalerus, son of Lampetus, and Agenor, shifty schemer ; Aenius, again, seeing Mimas the skilled huntsman leaping upon the bank of a promontory of Nile, wounded him with bronze in the back of the head, upon the crown ; into the river he rolled forward prone, the water was mingled with blood, his spirit left his flesh and flew far away lightly as a dream ; fishes swarmed upon his corpse and gathered round him on this side and that, devouring his flesh and fat entrails.

Automedon . . . battle . . . For truly the dense ranks of Blemeyes were being routed. There smote he Aesymnus in the belly ; the bronze spear, flying swiftly, sank through it, and the hero stood helpless,

This very difficult piece, obscure in phrasology and sometimes barbarous in prosody, was written in the 5th century A.D. by an inhabitant of Egyptian Thebes. Ostensibly its purpose is panegyric, but an ulterior motive is clearly discernible. The hero whom it praises is absent; and the poem is an illiterate but powerful appeal to him to return and save his country once again. The enemy—perhaps the Blemyes again—have taken advantage of his absence to renew their predatory incursions. The hero, compared successively to Perseus, Achilles and Odysseus, is exhorted to return and Even so Germanus fell upon the tents, and they . . .

Thus they followed Germanus, the bronze-mailed breaker of the ranks—on one side a throng of women in strong-twisted bonds, on the other a host of young warriors whom on the field he had taken alive, fugitives from battle. Earth moaned beneath the steps of men-at-arms and hooves of tireless horses crowded close together; shrill blared the trumpet, heralding to the fatherland the joyous victory of battle: nor conquer; and to bring with him a son, like Achilles' Neoptolemus, to succeed him in his valiant command. The mixture of panegyric and petition has a good parallel in the poem addressed to Johannes, B.K.T. v. 1, p. 117 (6 A.D.: probably Dioscorus of Aphroditopolis).

The detail is often obscure and sometimes unintelligible. Vv. 1-8: the hero and the Muses, who are to celebrate his deeds, fight together steadfast in battle. The hero and his brother were both taught the arts of war from early youth. In the gap after v. 8, the sense may have been:—"When you went away, you left your brother in command; but meantime the enemy has invaded us again, and your brother has failed us."

the city. "A Heracles is nothing to the land of Egypt!"—the only distinguished phrase in this sordid composition. Our hero once brought back the head of the enemy's leader on the point of his spear, and there was rejoicing throughout Thebes. Vv. 36-end: so now he is implored to return and save his city again. [Such metrical errors as those in vv. 4, 18, 35, 43, 46 need not be removed: nor should γὰρ δέ v. 27 be altered.]

Not only was he a steadfast fighter—so also are the Muses, who ever excel in kingly song. Did not her lady mother bear Calliope to carry shield of bronze? I taught you the arts of battle, and implored you both, when you ventured the battle cry like the son of Peleus, and lifted the mighty (unbroken) shield of oxhide. The interpretation of these comical lines is difficult. Two kings, one Trojan and one Achaean, meet in the house of a third party. The Trojan is "seeking to discover the race (pedigree) of a horse" (for γενεὴ ἵππου cf. Iliad v. 265, 268), the Achaean brings a colt with him. The third person is comically surprised.

. . . foot soldier, . . . to the horsemen, and unwelcome, flees them when they are near, pursues them when they charge, deluding them in the distance of the march, by the tactics of the roving infantry. He^a who leans forward into the sky, surveying all the farmland, with his projecting ridge watching the fields stretched out beneath. Pyles, with his topmost spur touching the stars, (ready) to relieve the clouds of their pangs that give birth to rain . . .

The date, context, and literary associations of these curious lines are uncertain. It is unlikely that they refer to the celebrated Wooden Horse. Beazley suggests as a possible background the story of the mares which Zeus gave to Laomedon in recompense for the rape of Ganymede, and which Laomedon refused to give to Heracles in recompense for the rescue of Hesione.

“ WHY have you two monarchs—one of the Trojans, the other of the Greeks—come up to my house, in harmony of spirit at home?—one seeking to discover the descent of a horse, while the other leads a colt! What now are you devising, mighty Zeus?

INCANTATION TO CURE HEADACHE [? 5 A.D.]

Spring-nymphs and extinguished the fire. In the next two lines it is suggested that this incantation shall extinguish the fires that burn in the sufferer from headache. Ed. pr. compare P. Amherst, ii. 11. A crude composition, unlikely to achieve its object.

(Small fragments of seven lines)

(the house) of the Mystics . . . burned down, . . . burned down on the mountain. . . . Seven fountains . . ., and seven dark-eyed maidens prayed to the dark (nymphs of the fountains), and put out the unwearying fire. Even so the grievous head-fire flies from the head before this incantation, flies too . . .

ADDRESS TO THE NILE [5-6 A.D.]

Vv. 7-9 are addressed to the Nile, here as elsewhere^a conceived as the groom of his bride Egypt. Cf. Nonnus (of whose school our poet is a member) vi, 341; xxvi, 229.

^a See the poem in praise of Johannes, B.K.T. v. 1 (Dioscorus of Aphrodito), and Keydell, loc. cit.
